OAKLAND COUNTY FACTS AND FIGURES

By Joe Haas

Growing from a population of 300 in 1820 to 396,000 in 1950, Oakland County has shown a development matched by few areas in the entire nation.

Its gain of 141,933 in population in the ten years between 1940 and 1950 represents an increase of nearly twice the present population of its largest city and county seat, Pontiac.

This indicates its great growth in areas away from its previous population center. While our county gained a firmer foothold on second place among Michigan's eighty-three counties, Pontiac city, with a gain of 7,055 in the ten years, dropped from sixth to seventh place among Michigan cities.

Pontiac's drop of one place was largely brought about by the phenomenal growth of Dearborn in Wayne County, which jumped over Pontiac, Lansing and Saginaw, to fourth place, following Detroit, Grand Rapids and Flint.

Although Oakland County has fourteen cities and ten villages, only about three-fifths of its population is located in them. This shows that it still maintains the rural aspect through a large part of its area.

Two of its townships, Waterford and Southfield, with no city or village wholly within their borders, have a combined population of about 43,000.

On account of the adoption of modern methods in farming, better fertilization and crop rotation, Oakland County's agricultural production maintains a pace among the leaders. This largely has been brought about by the big increase here in dairying.

With its manufacture of automobiles, trucks and many other things, mostly allied to transportation, Oakland County has had a marvelous growth. In two world wars it has been in the very heart of the arsenal of democracy and continues to do more than its share in this respect.

Our county seat, Pontiac, named in honor of the Indian chief generally regarded as the greatest ruler of the redmen, also has the distinction of being the only city in the world with a prominent make of automobile bearing its name.

Outstanding in Oakland County's progress in recent years has been the development of its outdoor recreational features. With more state parks than any other county and contiguous to a great metropolitan area with over 2,500,000 people, it is ideally situated in this respect.

In addition to its work in the state parks within the county, the Michigan Department of Conservation has created a bathing beach at Pontiac Lake that is one of the largest in the nation. During 1952, many more improvements are being made there.

With its four hundred lakes and many hills, our county has everything to be desired for a year round recreational program. A good program of winter sports is being arranged.

Many millions of dollars are being spent by the Huron-Clinton Metropolitan Authority in the development of its vast recreational facilities in Oakland County.

Through the years, Oakland County's legislative body, its Board of Supervisors, has rendered a good service and kept pace with its growth and development. Starting soon after the organization of the county, the first Board of Supervisors in 1820 had four members. As the various townships were organized, this number grew to twenty-five when that organization was completed in 1838 and the Board continued with that number for many years. Then, as the population centers merited better representation, the Board membership has gradually been increased to its present number, eighty-five. It is a matter quite worthy of note that although the county's population now is around the four hundred thousand mark, the Board of Supervisors, during the past year, held only nine meetings, the least number in over one hundred years. This indicates a business ability, associated with competent committee and individual work, that surely is commendable.

Oakland County's schools and churches, two factors that contribute so much to an ideal home life, are among the foremost in the nation. Its eighty-five service clubs, together with many other civic organizations, all are plugging to make it a better place to live.

My only peeve about Oakland County is with its own residents who do not get out and learn more about it. It has the industrial plants, the business houses, the good highways, magnificent vistas and everything else to make you have a greater pride in it, the more you know about it.

Let's make 1952 a "See Oakland County" year.
