OAKLAND COUNTY FACTS AND FIGURES

By Joe Haas

Without doubt, now the fastest growing area in Michigan and probably in the entire United States, is Oakland County. Its increase in population and otherwise during the past five years has put the figures of the federal census of 1950 into the discard. This is true of all of its twenty-five townships, without exception, but more particularly true in those in the south three-fifths of the county.

But even the so-called rural areas have joined the rest of the county in a home building development that is truly marvelous. Since the 1950 count was made, more new homes have been built in the county than in any previous similar period in its history. Most of these homes are outside the limits of any city or village, but the urban construction has made vacant lots scarce in most of the county's incorporated municipalities. One of the most outstanding and commendable features of this mammoth home construction is the disappearance of the "shack." All but a very small percentage of these new homes are far above the average type of most areas. Building restrictions on newly developed subdivisions have brought about a condition that makes the new homes of a standard of which any community can feel proud.

As a further testimonial to the general progress of the county, with few exceptions, these homes are occupied by people who are employed within its borders, in its great industrial plants or otherwise. They thus become permanent residents and affiliate with, and help build up our schools, churches and other cultural advantages.

However, this great growth poses a number of problems. Most of our public utilities appear to be keeping pace with the development. Our schools are making a good fight to match it. Our churches, service clubs and other affiliated organizations are meeting it.

Water and sewer extensions appear to be heavy problems but, during the past year, plans have been put in motion to largely overcome them, although the program must cover a period of years. The general terrain of some areas in the county is not conducive to any immediate action that can cope with such a rapid growth.

More and better highways is the biggest overall need. Most of our older pavements require repairing and widening and much new construction must be provided. A great deal of the latter is brought about by the hundreds of miles of new streets in the subdivisions platted in recent years and now being built up. Perhaps the fact that we are located in the very heart of the world's greatest manufacturing area, quite largely specializing in automobiles, trucks and buses, makes us more highway conscious. It seems that we should at least provide them with the best of roads to get their new product out of the county in which it was manufactured. Plans are now being worked out to overcome this difficulty which also plagues many areas in which the growth is not so rapid.

Never before did our lakes and other recreational spots get the outside attention that they now are being accorded. The Michigan State Conservation Department plans to devote a larger sum than ever before to the further development of its lands in the county. The Huron-Clinton Metropolitan Authority keeps us at the top of its list for continual expansion of its present facilities and the various state and county parks all have projects under way that will better accommodate our booming population.

Oakland County's factories are generally exceeding their previous output. Employment is at tops, retail and wholesale business is better than ever before, bank statements all show large increases and the whole atmosphere indicates that the big home construction is a healthy project.

In spite of its industrialization and residential platting, Oakland County continues to be among the state's leading agricultural counties. This is brought about by more intensive farming, better fertilization and crop rotation. Our dairy and fruit products are on the gain.

So, in these changing times, when every year brings innovations in our method of life and in many other ways, Oakland County continues to be an ideal place in which to live, work and do business.
