OAKLAND COUNTY FACTS AND FIGURES

By Mrs. Donald E. Adams

No single area in Michigan has a more interesting history than Oakland County. The romantic prelude to our story begins with the Indians who roamed along the Saginaw Trail and camped from time to time at Sashabaw Plains, Apple Island, and various other beautiful spots. It continues with the surveyors, the exploring parties and travelers like the famous DeTocqueville. It concludes with permanent settlements throughout our county and its subsequent development.

The first permanent settlers in Oakland County were the families of James Graham, Alexander Graham, and Christopher Hartsough who came to what is now Avon Township March 17, 1817. Like many of the early Oakland County settlers, they stopped at Mt. Clemens before moving into the county. They proceeded along the Clinton River to their new home site. They were succeeded by John Hersey who located on Paint Creek and, in the fall of 1818, made the first land entry.

That same fall, on November 5, 1818, the Pontiac Company was organized by a group of Detroit and Macomb County men for the purpose of purchasing land and laying out a town. It was largely a business venture, although certain of the members, notably Colonel Stephen Mack, actually did settle in Oakland County.

The organization of the Pontiac Company by friends and associates of Governor Lewis Cass was undoubtedly the impetus which prompted official action to be taken organizing Oakland County, for on January 12, 1819 a proclamation was issued by Governor Cass laying out the boundaries of the county. The Pontiac Company promptly offered to contribute both property and money if the county seat was established at Pontiac. On March 28, 1820, Governor Cass issued a proclamation declaring the inhabitants of Oakland County entitled to all the privileges to which the inhabitants of other counties were entitled and establishing the seat of justice at Pontiac.

On June 28, 1820 by another proclamation the county was divided into two townships, Oakland and Bloomfield. The northern three tiers of our present townships were part of Oakland Township and the southern two tiers were part of Bloomfield. Subsequently, on April 27, 1827, the Legislative Council of the Territory of Michigan approved an act dividing Oakland County into five townships: Farmington, Bloomfield, Troy, Oakland and Pontiac.

By this act, part of Lapeer County and the counties of Shiawassee and Saginaw as then set off were attached to the township of Pontiac, which also included the area encompassed in Oakland County's present nine northwest townships, Pontiac Township, and most of the present city of Pontiac.

Meanwhile, as the Governor and Territorial Council took official action, permanent settlers were filtering in to various parts of the county. The initial residents of the village of Pontiac were encouraged to settle there by the Pontiac Company's policy of giving a lot to the first six mechanics who would agree to settle permanently. Their records show that Joseph Todd, Orison Allen, Joshua S. Terry and Charles Howard were assigned donation lots on February 12, 1822 (they having by that time shown their intention to remain), and on that same date two additional lots were designated to be donation lots for a blacksmith and a clothier.

When the first settlers of Waterford Township, the Oliver Williams family, moved from Detroit to their new home at Silver Lake in March, 1819, they found a few settlers along the route. They stopped overnight at William Thurber's in the Royal Oak area, visited briefly the next morning in the Birmingham area with Dr. Ziba Swan's and Sidney Dole's families, and had dinner at noon at Pontiac at the one log house in the village, which housed three families and a few workmen. One by one other families moved into the county, and by 1820 the census showed 330 residents.

From these small beginnings Oakland County has grown to be the metropolitan area that it is today. Initiative, inventiveness and industry characterized not only the first Oakland County residents but also substantial numbers of those who have succeeded them in the century and a half of our recorded history. Today we have a thriving community, outstanding as a part of the automotive center of the world and as a most desirable residential area. An Oakland County resident may say with the Psalmist: "The lines are fallen unto me in pleasant places, yea, I have a goodly heritage."
