HISTORY OF ROCHESTER

Nearly one hundred and fifty years ago the township of Avon was romantically described, by an unknown local historian, as "generally undulating and along the streams the land rises to elevations worthy to be designated as hills well grown with sturdy oaks."

Avon, Oakland Township and the City of Rochester have a rich and interesting history. They have a genesis that ranks with the very earliest of all of Michigan and that, throughout the years, has been noted by famous people, events, establishments, and organizations of more than colloquial note.

Until the current decade, the Village of Rochester grew gradually, maintaining its aura of rural tranquility as its population expanded.

Incorporated as a village in April 1869, the first settlers arrived in the Rochester area more than 135 years ago. The seeds of a town were planted and soon several small mills were built along the Clinton River, which joins Paint Creek in the area. This caused several Chippewa Indians to leave the banks of the rivers, moving north to the Clair and Midland, Michigan areas.

A business district, which today stretches along several blocks of M-150 as it bisects the village, slowly grew. The town continued to expand, becoming a marketing center for Oakland County farmers by the turn of the century and developing into a rail center, having three railroad lines, Detroit-Bay City, Grand Trunk and the electric train.

In 1812 Congress decided to give two million acres of land in the Territory of Michigan to veterans of the War of 1812 as "bounty land." A team of surveyors made a superficial survey beyond Detroit and reported that it was all "worthless swampland." It was not until several years later that a few pioneers investigated and found that a few miles beyond there was excellent farmland.

An early settlement was made at Mt. Clemens with settlers arriving from Detroit or New York State via Lake Erie, and the Detroit River.

Thus it was that our first settlers, James Graham, his son Alexander, and son-in-law Christopher Hartsough, with their wives, traveled from Mt. Clemens to a place located just east of today's Detroit Edison office (on East Third Street). They did not purchase their land from the government immediately, they just "squatted" on it for five years. Their arrival was on March 17, 1817.

The following year, 1818, a son was born to the wife of Alexander Graham. Named James, he was the first white child born in what is now Oakland County. (The name Oakland being chosen, because of its many oak trees.)

The year 1818 also marked the first official purchase of land in Avon Township by John Hersey. Land sold at $1.25 per acre, one-quarter at the time of purchase, the balance due in yearly payments, depending on land clearance, and crop raising.

Rochester was named in honor of Rochester, New York, as most of the settlers had come from that area. Rochester, New York in turn had been named in honor of Rochester, County Kent, England.

The first industry in the new settlement was a water powered saw mill, erected in 1819. By 1826 the village boasted several other industries and a general store. The earliest post office was located three miles south of town, the Rochester office opening in 1828-29. Letter mail was brought in on horseback from Royal Oak three times each week.

About 1823 a school was organized in the Alexander Graham cabin. The Congregational Church was established on July 1st, 1827, and is now the oldest of its denomination in Michigan.

In those early days the Village of Stony Creek eclipsed Rochester. As late as 1876, it boasted a woolen mill, two saw and cider mills, a blacksmith shop and a drygoods-grocery store. The Stony Creek Cemetery, which you may find just off the Romeo Road, was established in March, 1839. It is the burial place for many early settlers. The Stony Creek Masonic Lodge, too, has its place in events worth noting. Chartered in 1825, known as Mount Moriah, this lodge was the only one in Michigan which sustained its organization during the anti-Masonic excitement of the 1840's. This lodge later formed the nucleus for the present Rochester Masonic Lodge.

In the same early days roads and means of transportation were few and impassable much of the year. As a result, the transportation cost often equaled the value of the goods. Thus, in 1837 a project got under way to connect Lake Erie and Lake Michigan by means of a canal through the Clinton River by way of Mt. Clemens. The canal was completed as far as Rochester but was abandoned at this point as the corporation became bankrupt.

The advent of the Detroit and Bay City railroad in 1872 was a turning point in the life of the manufacturing concerns. This railroad later became part of the Michigan Central and New York Central System. In 1895, the Grand Trunk Railroad also made possible service from Port Huron to Pontiac and Western points.

The village water system was installed in 1894 and the volunteer fire department was organized in 1896. Electricity was acquired in 1897. In 1900, Mr. Bert Norton instituted the first telephone system. The exchange was located in the rear of his drug store with about 50 subscribers. Later this system was purchased by the Michigan Bell Telephone Company in 1924. At present the subscriptions number approximately 10,000.

It is of surprising interest to know that the State Fair was held in Rochester for a few years; those years being 1898, 1899 and 1900. Its location being on an old Indian Camp Ground where now stands the senior high school.

Occupying only 1.56 square miles of land, the City of Rochester had a population of 5,431 residents in 1960. Today, the figure stands at 6,500 and before the year is out, city officials estimate, perhaps another 1,000 persons will live in Rochester.

The combination of Rochester and Avon Township population five years ago was 21,000. Experts believe it will reach 30,000 by the end of this decade. A conservative estimate for 1980 is 46,000.

In September, 1966, village electors voted to become a city. The charter for the new city was approved in January, 1967. After 98 years of village government, Rochester's cityhood became official on February 13, 1967.

Rochester of the future will consist of scores of luxury apartment buildings, modern churches and high-quality industry.

Already attracting many education-conscious families because of our fine schools, the community will continue to support good schools . . . Oakland University, Michigan Christian College, Oakland Community College, the Meadow Brook Festival, the Meadow Brook Theatre, and the Art 'n Apples Festival are a few of the ingredients that make Rochester unique today — and will appeal to those who are in search of a better tomorrow.

As mentioned at the beginning of this history, Rochester incorporated as a village on April 12, 1869 with Dr. Jess Wilson as first council president. June, 1969 has been established as Centennial month to celebrate Rochester's 100th birthday.
