"We have formulated what we hope to adopt as zoning ordinances — which we haven't seen since and I realaly feel is a waste of our time, the planning beard's time and the developer's time to sit here and discuss the same question over and over."

Mrs. Hoyer first proposed that a moratorium be placed on all plats utilizing the options, until the council could receive the new zoning ordinances. City Attorney Dave Fried said, however, that súch a moratorium would be violating a state law which requires that cities act upon proposed plats numerous

For almost a year now, the State Highway Commission and the Michigan Department of State Highways and Transportation have considered alternatives to the M-275 freeway project that was cancelled by the commission in January, 1977.

A number of alternatives ranging from a thinly disguised resurrection of the original freeway proposal to plans calling for parkways, boulevards and scenic drives - have been offered to the commission which, a little over two months ago, narrowed the choices to two — a boulevard along portions of Haggerty Road and the original freeway alignment, sponsored by Oakland County Commissioner Robert A. McConnell, and a scenic drive, proposed by the Citizens in Opposition to M-275, that would provide for improvements to Haggerty. Union Lake and Williams Lake

Based on a careful analysis of both proposals, we feel it would be wise for the highway commission to approve the McConnell plan and authorize the department to proceed with that project im-

The major difference between the alternatives, it seems to us, is that the Citizens in Opposition proposal apparently would have a greater impact on existing homes and businesses, especially along the Union Lake Road corridor. and several lakes, including Lower Straits, Union, Long and Cooley.

McConnell's plan, we feel also provides access to a major north-south artery in the northwestern portion of Commerce Township which, with or without M-275, appears to be developing at a rapid pace.

And, while the citizens' group is concerned that connection of any major artery with I-696 will accelerate radial growth in the lakes area, we feel that many west Oakland residents, especially those who commute to work each day in Detroit or its nearnorthside suburbs, desire - and deserve — access to southeast Michigan's freeway system.

We are concerned that the McConnell proposal would, for all practical purposes, wipe out Dodge Park Number Five: however, the state highway department has purchased a replacement parcel adjacent to the Proud Lake Recreation Area which apparently will satisfy federal requirements to mitigate the loss of the parkland.

Speaking for myself

Criminal rehabilitation

NECESSARY ...

QUESTIONABLE . . .

''We take on a burden when we put a man behind walls and that burden is to give him a chance to change. If we deny him that, we deny his status as a human being, and to deny that is to diminish our own humanity and plant the seeds of future anguish for ourselves." -Chief Justice Warren E. Burger

In far too many cases, the prison, the reformatory, and the jail provide the least effective type of correctional disposition. There is strong evidence that institutions frequently create more crime than they prevent. We know today incarceration alone is inadequate to Simply warehousing humans is offensive to me. Unacceptable high recidivism rates, the destructive impact of incarceration and the largely illusory nature of societal protection gained through confinement (98 out of 100 incarcerated offenders return eventually to their communities) also causes me to question the effectiveness of that warehousing.

Rehabilitation is a confusing term defined by many and understood by few. For me, rehabilitation equals change, and thus as Justice Burger charges, rehabilitation programs should provide the opportunity for offenders to change. Provided opportunities to change behavior, some people will do so.

Luella Burke

Some new studies are challenging the effectiveness of rehabilitation programs charging that they don't work. Too many inmates have come out of the prisons just as committed to crime as when they went in or even more so. And crime rates have continued to soar.

Currently, the parole boards release a prisoner when they decide he's been rehabilitated. This has turned prisons into drama schools. Prisoners have become wise to this and acting rehabilitated has become common among inmates.

With a few isolated exceptions, the rehabilitative efforts that have been reported so far have had no appreciable effect on recidivism. The only area rehabilitation seems to be making any headway in at all is at the local level with the young first offender. However, we have not been in rehabilitation long enough to really have concrete figures showing success or failure on the Society demands we must keep on trying. Try, if you will, a new deterrent to crime — certainty of punish-

Is it because Representative Fessler was overcome by the beauty of spring and decided in a rush of emotion for his fellow man that it was about time he did something to honor his old friend Gil?

But there are others, and, as I say, a rotten, suspicious lot they are, who suspect political motives behind the whole deal.

You see, a couple of months ago a rumor was started — whether it had the least whisper of truth behind it is unknown - that Gil Henderson was interested in running for Fessler's seat.

Henderson had all the necessary ingredients to start a good rumor. The Michigan Education Association (MEA) was looking for someone to oust Fessler — someone who would be sympathetic to education. And the candidate would have to be Republican because odds are Fessler would be easier to defeat in a primary than the general election against a Democrat.

Henderson, a Republican principal in Farmington schools with political experience, would fit such a bill perfectly. As the rumor of the rumor goes, it took a while before the story of Henderson's possible candidacy reached Fessler. But when it did, Fessler launched into an immediate counter-offensive and threw a party in Henderson's honor.

And a good counter-offensive it was. I mean. who could try and take another man's job right after he has treated you to a dinner of steak and Rumor Number 2 — Everyone knows this one. Romaine Roethel will try to get on the ticket against Fessler on the Democratic side. Word has t Romaine can get the financial backing to run. Word also has it Fessler would like Romaine to run - he thinks she would be an easy candidate to beat.

Another candidate hopeful on the Democratic side: Steve Rosman, head of the Citizens in Opposition to M-275, a group based in Commerce Township. Rossman has been busy these past few weeks trying to talk Romaine out of running.

Rumor Number 3 — The City of Novi has more or less ditched its main negotiator, Ron Keller, in its talks with the four unions still without a contract. City Manager Ed Kriewall has stepped in to try and keep things moving.

Keller will likely be spending more time now doing what he is officially supposed to be doing -

Schoolday heroes . . .

. . . and the Roller Derby Queen

They say every kid has a hero. It may not be true any more, but that's the way it was when I was back in grade school. And everybody's hero was a sports figure, and baseball players dominated.

I was a little different than most kids though, because I had three heroes. Since I was a Tiger fan, they were naturally all Detroit Tigers. First all there was Al Kaline. I adopted him as one of my heroes because he batted righthanded and was named Al, just like me. When I pitched I became Hank Aguirre, the southpaw, just like me. I even had a homemade warmup jacket made with "Aguirre" (spelled wrong) scribbled on the back of it. It didn't matter that Aguirre wasn't a very good pitcher because I wasn't too hot either. But mostly I played first base, and what better lefthanded first baseman was there around than Norm Cash. I remember a picture of Norm on the cover of a 1967 Tiger program. He was leaping straight up over first base as if jumping for a high throw. I had my parents take a picture of me like that too. Although Norm and I were both lefthanded throwing first basemen, he batted left and I batted right. Well, I'd see if I could change that. I began to hit lefty in practice. Amazingly, I had more power from the left side, but I was slow geting out of the box after connecting, and slower still at getting out of the way of

Although I adopted Norm's style in practice, I was reluctant to try it in a game because of my fear of being hit. Well, I finally worked up the courage and stepped in on the left side against the fastest, strongest, and wildest pitcher in

Wham! First pitch, right upside the head! Needless to say that was the last time I tried to hit like Norm Cash. But boys grow up and heroes are forgotten and Norm Cash was laid to rest with the likes of Al Kaline and Hank Aguirre But alas, Norm Cash surfaces again, alive and well and living in Edgewood Park. So, after trying to pin down old Norman for an interview since mid-December, I finally succeeded. The interview is written up elsewhere in the paper, but let me tell you something that isn't there.

When I arrived, Norm introduced me to his pretty blonde wife, Dorothy. Just before I left, he asked me to make sure I got her name in the article. I had been holding back on one question all evening, and since he brought up the subject, I thought of no better time than now to pop it.

· "I heard that your wife was once a roller derby queen. Is that true?" Norm started snickering, "Yeah, that's her." "It is not," she shouted, scolding Norm and making sure I got it right. " was a figure skater, I was never in the roller derby."

While Norm was trying to hold back a laugh, she told me she had been the Great Lakes regional figure skating champ a few years back. . "Somehow that got printed in a Texas paper," she said, "and nobody seems to forget it. I don't know how they ever got ahold of that." As I walked out the door, Norm was still snickering.

School boards, teachers and more specifically, the public are the losers as "labor relations experts" gain more and more control of the collective bargaining process, according to Charles W: Cheng, a former teacher union organizer in Michigan

Author of the book, Altering Collective Bargaining: Citizen Participation in Educational Decision Making, Cheng suggests ways to include parents in the bargaining process.

He challenges teachers to re-examine the policies their leaders have pursued, suggesting ways of opening up the bargaining process to the public. He contends it can be done without sacrificing the gains

That challenge extends also to school boards which, Cheng notes, are losing their authority to administrators who jealously resist encroachment by laymen into the field of education in general and into 🙎 collective bargaining in particular.

The educational bargaining process, says Cheng, has given rise to a "new class of professionals consisting of union staff, board of education negotiators, and neutral third parties (arbitrators and

"And, as the scope of bargaining has expanded, community groups have discovered that these new professionals compose yet another impenetrable layer in the educational power structure."

Bargaining based on private sector practice is not appropriate for public education, he asserts. As the range of bargaining subjects continue to widen, more and more educational policy matters are decided in the private negotiation 🏰 process by fewer and fewer people. Tracing the growth of bargaining centralization, Cheng notes that, "Both the union leadership and the board's chief negotiators preferred a centralized bargaining structure and the concentration of power this

"Centralization enabled union staff to maintain structural control 🔼 in two board and significant areas: day-to-day relations with school administrators; and relations with the union rank-and-file, who came to rely on the union power 'downtown' - an image that union leaders

"The school administration's negotiating office cooperated, recognizing that it would be easier to deal with the known quantity of union officialdom than with a volatile rank-and-file.' Cheng contends that the "expertise" of the professional bargainer often lies more in labor relations than in education. "It is not uncommon for negotiators to be unfamiliar with public schooling," he notes. Furthermore, in some cases the interests of school and adterests of the school board — all of which means the present closed method of collective bargaining not only is costing the public a direct voice in what happens within their schools but it is undermining the school board's policy making, he points out. Just as collective bargaining has led to the transfer of power from board members to professional bargainers, so too, has power of rankand-file teachers been transferred to their union leaders.

Entrance of third parties — arbitrators and mediators — further Rerodes the local control. Placement of local issues in their hands, he suggests, means decisions are being made by persons not accountable to the public interest. "In summary, then, a new class of professionals in unions, schools, and the state bureaucracies now wield enormous influence in the operation of large urban school systems. Through formal and informal processes of bargaining, these new technocrats force school boards, teachers, and community members further away from a crucial arena where far-reaching educational policy decisions are made," Cheng'

Cheng, who wrote his book while at Harvard University and who now is on the staff of the University of Southern California, cites five "promising" examples of reform that could provide for public participation in the bargaining process, which in most school districts across the country currently occurs in secret.

These include: 1. Encourage unions and boards to seek community input during the formation of bargaining demands. 2. Establish multi-level bargaining whereby supplementary agreements to the master contract are negotiated with regional and/or local school boards.

April sky

3. Permit citizens to view negotiations in open bargaining sesreports, while in others they agree to remain silent until bargaining is 4. Grant observer status to community groups and allow observers to report to the public. 5. Introduce multi-party negotiations in which a third force would be formally recognized at the bargaining table. Here briefly is how he describes each of these proposals:

Although multi-party bargaining has not yet occurred in public school negotiations at the primary and secondary levels, Oregon and Montana have enacted laws calling for student participation in bargaining at the college level. Three Massachusetts state colleges also provide for student participation.

In examining this proposal, Cheng says, "A number of problems must be solved if multi-party bargaining is to be a workable alternative to the current bilateral structure. For instance, the process of establishing ground rules for negotiations would become more com-

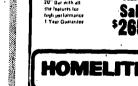

Although decisions "are more difficult with three parties than with two," Cheng emphasizes that "every day we successfully resolve pro blems among multiple parties; clearly the dilemma is not insurmoun-

In reviewing these proposed methods of "opening up" bargaining, Cheng concludes that there is little evidence to imply automatic success, but he adds, "there is reason to be somewhat optimistic."

Examples in a couple different school districts "indicate that multi-level and multi-party bargaining are not necessarily unrealistic. "By the same token," he adds, "California's new teacherbargaining law illustrates that lobbying efforts can succeed in bringing at least one form of citizen input into negotiations. Even the goldfish-bowl approach implemented (in a number of school districts), while not permitting citizen participation, does place negotiations before the general public."

Headaches can be so severe they control the lives of their victims. But when relief comes, the patient finds he has a new "problem" - creating a pain-free life style. Many can't believe the pain is really gone for good. These are the findings of Joel R. Saper, M.D., neurologist at The University of Michigan Hospital who has seen more than 2,000 patients for the treatment of headache during the past three years. He is currently engaged in a research project on a new use of the drug Inderol for headaches. "The pain of a headache is unlike other pain. It generally cannot be ignored," says Dr. Saper. "It affects the control center of the body. But after many years of anticipating and living with pain, its relief requires some ad

For eight years one of his patients, engineer Hollis Clymer, would run from his office to a darkened conference room several times a day and rock back and forth until the headache was over. If no one was around he would scream

He found that rocking back and forth helped the excruciating burning and twisting pain he would feel for 20 minutes up to 14 times daily. Even so he kept meticulous records of his attacks, trying to treat his headaches as he would any engineering problem.

When he finally found Dr. Saper he had been all over the country seeking relief. He said he was told by one doctor, in effect, to go home and suffer; "many of my patients commit suicide with your kind of headache." "Dr.

Saper took a look at my 'Record Book of Headaches' and told me he would begin a search for something to help me,' Clymer said.

Dr. Saper tried Lithium (a drug not traditionally used for headache problems). "At first I would have the warning signs of a headache. My left shoulder started to tingle and I felt the pain start to move up my jaw. I was just about to run from my office to the conference room, but the headache didn't come. My first day in eight years without wanting to die. I came home to my wife and I cried like I was reborn. "Believe me, I had started the process to suicide more than once. Now I've accepted an assignment overseas for a few weeks. The big difference in my life? No headaches. I know that I had the pain, but I really can't re-create

Propose Juvenile Code revisions

LANSING - The Michigan Legislature this session has taken on the tasks of total rewrites of the Public and Mental Health Codes, the Criminal Code, the Probate Code and now has sets its sights on a revisions of the Juvenile Code.

Legislation was introduced revising the state's juvenile code to redefine status offenses, establish runaway counseling and shelter facilities and provide new procedures for bringing juveniles to trial as adults. Action in the House may come as early as this spring as a result of a special committee which began work on the revision last August. Four pending bills would completely alter Michigan's current juvenile code that was adopted in 1944 which has become archaic and unresponsive to modern times and needs.

The most controversial part of the package will deal with status offenders. previous offenses. The bills redefine status offenses into

MICHIGAN BELL said in its annual report that 1977 was a "good year" for both its customers and the company. David K. Easlick, company president, said the telephone company moved "an encouraging step forward" during the year in its struggle

Just as important, he said, customers were provided with service that "ranked with the best anywhere" at rates that were below average compared with other states. "The challenge before us now is to build on the financial recovery

we've begun," Easlick said. "Our continuing ability to serve customers well depends on it.' Easlick termed last year's financial progress "markedly better" than in 1976 when Michigan Bell's earnings rate showed a slight imsuccessfully concluding a comprehensive personal interview conprovement after three successive years of decline.

He attributed 1977's results to a combination of cost-cutting technology, self-help marketing efforts, a resurgent Michigan economy and "more realistic" rates.

Are you ready for this. Mother Nature may be stirring, but we must Veport that spring has not yet sprung.

It may be close at hand, but a quick check of local swamps reveals that the true harbinger of spring has not yet made an appearance. Although some trees are showing their buds, the snow has melted, leaving only those compacted dirty reminders of a hard winter, the air has slightly warmed and robins are returning to their area haunts, spring is not yet here. The peepers have not yet sounded.

Given a string of warm days and slightly warmer nights, the swamps will come alive. The peepers will rise to the rocks, logs and swamplines to sound their melody of the night...the constant, highpitched hum of the tiny frog.

It is probably the most welcome, true song of spring's arrival. But through many years of peeper analysis, I have found the little harbingers must go two soundings before it can truly be said that spring has made its arrival.

The tenth annual West Acres Artist Market is set for Saturday, April 29, in new clubhouse facilities located at the West Acres beach.

According to Pat Lampe, the West Acres Women's Association sponsored mart will draw at least 40 high caliber artists from around the state. Weather permitting, the snow will spill out onto the grounds overlooking the lake.
