Ex-chief hired in sex case

By SUZANNE HOLLYER
Staff Writer

Novi schools has hired a retired Novi Police Department official to lead an investigation into alleged sexual misconduct charges against a teacher.

Former Deputy Chief Richard Faulkner will be conducting an investigation into the charges made by a student against band director Craig Strain.

Strain has been suspended with pay since Oct. 17.

The retired deputy chief was hired "to run down some loose ends," said acting school Superintendent William Barr.

School district attorneys also will investigate the case, Barr said. And the district also will use police reports if available in its investigation.

Strain's case is being investigated by the Livonia Police Department.

The school board agreed at an Oct. 22 special meeting that the accusations against Strain deserved investigation. The investigation was to be completed by a Dec. 4 hearing if Strain requested an opportunity to appear before the board.

Strain has indicated he would like a hearing, Barr said.

The hearing can be held in open or closed session at Strain's request.

Band performances have continued as scheduled since Strain's suspension began, Barr said.

The school district has hired an interim band director. Tim Hoey, a Michigan native, will be leading the band until the Strain case is resolved.

Band member Matt Wickert said Hoey is a good band teacher, but many students refuse to give him a chance.

"A lot of people shut him out. It's like Strain or nothing," he said.

Student Danielle Kuenzel said she is among the students who would like Strain returned to the classroom.

"I don't care if he did or didn't do it. I just want him back in the band," Kuenzel said.

Rumors that the band's planned trip to Florida will be cancelled are untrue, Barr said.

$500 million waste plan faces voters

By SCOTT DANIEL
Staff Writer

Oakland County's solid waste program will be put to the test tomorrow in Novi when voters help decide if the $500 million plan should be funded.

According to Ann Hobart, spokesperson for the county's solid waste management department, voter turnout is expected to be light. She said she expects a close vote, but is optimistic funding will be approved despite considerable opposition.

"I've been an optimist all along," Hobart said. "The program makes a lot of sense. It follows what the citizens want."

"I think it will pass if people get out and vote."

If approved, the funds would be used to sell general obligation bonds. The bonds, theoretically, would be paid off by revenues generated from the system.

Funds from the bond sale would be used to acquire recycling processing centers, compost facilities, household hazardous waste programs and landfill space. The bulk of the money for the program is for the waste-to-energy incinerator, which is estimated at nearly $300 million by the county.

Objections to the plan have centered around the incinerator, which would be placed in Auburn Hills. John Freeman, spokesperson of Taxpayers for a Clean Environment, a coalition of groups against the plan, said the incinerator would put harmful contaminants including mercury, lead and dioxins into the air.

"In the long run," Freeman said, "it would be healthier for our county and our people to recycle rather than incinerate."

Novi City Council endorsed the county plan earlier this year with only one dissenting vote. City Manager Ed Kriewall acknowledged concerns about air contaminants, but said he was confident the incinerator would be safe.

"I think there is probably room for incineration in Oakland County," he said, "providing it meets all the environmental questions."

Hobart said the concerns about the incinerator may be unfounded. The device, she said, would be constructed with state of the art safety equipment.

City trash future remains in limbo

By SCOTT DANIEL
Staff Writer

City Council and the Resource Recovery and Recycling Authority of Southwest Oakland County (RRRASOC) will decide the fate of Novi's rubbish.

Neighborhoods are currently left to negotiate their own trash pickups. But, all that will change next fall when Novi goes to a city-wide collection program.

The city and authority will have to decide by then if they wish to participate in the county's solid waste program or provide their own services. According to City Manager Ed Kriewall, Novi's hands are tied until voters make a decision on the county plan tomorrow.

"We can't make a decision until the county does," he said.

Voters will be asked Tuesday to approve a bond issue for financing of the plan. The county wants $500 million to construct an incinerator, recycling processing centers, compost facilities, household hazardous waste programs and additional landfill space.

RRRASOC General Manager Lenora Jadun said it's likely the authority will not participate in the county plan if it's approved. She said the city's decision may come down to the bottom line.

"It's a matter of economics," Jadun said. "If we are more economical than the county, they will probably come here."

The county has quoted a price of $65 per ton of garbage to burn it in the proposed incinerator, she said. The authority recently signed a 10-year agreement to landfill in Salem Township with BFI for $33 per ton, Jadun added.

Unless Oakland County can come back with a better offer, "we probably will landfill" nonrecyclable waste, she said.

RRRASOC would also have the option of using the Detroit incinerator at a cheaper cost than the county service. The going rate is $45 per ton downtown, Jadun said.

Kriewall said the city would likely follow the authority's lead. He said RRRASOC would provide a more "expedient" alternative than the county.

"We're not real happy with the county," Kriewall said.

The county's plan could be clouded by state action, he added.

"We feel the state will move away from incinerators and back to landfills," Kriewall said. "It could change the whole scenario."

Countdown to election day begins

By JAN JEFFRES
Staff Writer

Indecisive voters will find selecting a mayor a breeze Tuesday.

The only choice is the current office-holder, Matthew Quinn, who no doubt will be the first mayor in city history to reap a third, two-year term. His salary is $20 per meeting.

It gets tougher when it comes to choosing three city council members. Six are vying for the four-year terms: parks and recreation commissioner Diana Canup, chiropractor Dr. Kevin Crain, real estate broker Carol Mason, former mayor Robert Schmid and parks and recreation commissioner Gerald Shulman.

The lone incumbent on the ballot is Joseph Toth, who has already served five years.

Schmid, Mason and Toth were the leaders in the September primary election. In that order, followed by Crain, Canup and Shulman. Council members earn $15 per meeting, typically a four- to five-hour session.

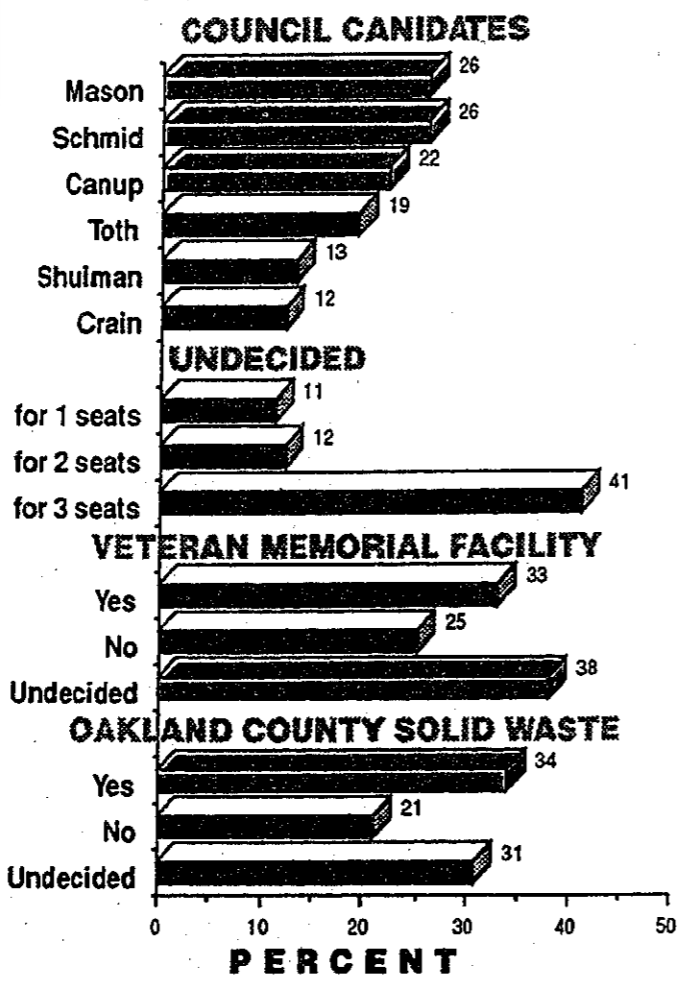

Monday, retiring council member Martha Hoyer and Mayor Pro Tem Edward Leininger will be saluted by their colleagues at a pre-meeting reception.

Two ballot issues will face voters, only one of them local. The Veterans Alliance of Novi is seeking a .28-mill property tax increase to build a veterans memorial facility here. The millage is for a 15-year bond issue which may not exceed $2.9 million.

Today's election eve

State laws provide for voter-approved financing of election facilities, which in Novi would serve as headquarters for the American Legion, AMVETS, Disabled American Veterans and the Marine Corps League. Other veterans groups are eligible to join in.

If this midsize is approved, an owner of a $100,000 would add a $14 charge to the current tax bill, while a $150,000 householder would face another $21 in taxes. For a $200,000 home, the yearly rate would be $28.

This would be an add-on to the current city property taxmillage of 10.6916. One mill equals one dollar per each $1,000 of state equalized valuation of property — roughly 50 percent of the market value.

In addition, Oakland County wants voters to OK a $500 million bond issue to finance the Oakland County Solid Waste Management System, which includes a waste-to-energy incinerator in Auburn Hills, a landfill in Orion Township, and several materials recovery facilities. (See related story.)

The waste program, to be financed by user fees, will not lead to a property tax increase.

City Clerk Gerry Slipp said Friday 525 absentee ballots have been sent out, slightly more than the 516 collected in the last city election in 1989. Slipp estimates that 5,000 to 6,000 voters will go to the polls Tuesday.

"For a city election, that's fairly decent," she added.

A NoviNews poll, conducted via random telephone calls late last week, showed a down to the wire race for City Council, and equally narrow margins on the two ballot issues (see accompanying chart).

While both the Veteran's Memorial Facility and the County Solid Waste Plan were favored to pass by 3-to-2 margins, a third of the people sampled remained undecided on both issues.

In the council race, Mason and Schmid were neck-and-neck for the lead. Canup was close behind, slightly ahead of the incumbent Toth.

Humor brings recognition for Frog's Leap

Most wineries have a "founding" story to tell. None is more humorous than that of Frog's Leap Winery.

The winery's name, a take-off on California's famous Stag's Leap Wine Cellars in the Napa Valley, bespeaks the good humor of owners John Williams, his wife, Julie, and partner, Larry Turley.

Winemaker John Williams details his story back to his family roots in New York State dairy country. As a Cornell University sophomore majoring in agriculture, he ran out of money and accepted a work/study program with an assignment in Hammondsport, N.Y., at the Taylor Wine Co.

"Everything about wine was instantly appealing," Williams said. "It was a perfect blend of my agricultural interests, family tradition and history. My work experience caused me to revise my major to an enology/agriculture degree."

In 1975, during his senior year spring break, Williams secured a $69 Greyhound Ameripass and visited California's Napa Valley for the first time.

"The trip out took five days," he recalls. "I planned to camp in Napa's Bothe State Park, but it was full. I noticed an abandoned farmhouse across the road from the park and pitched my tent there for the night."

"Early the next morning, I was awakened by the roar of a motorcycle. My tent flap was ripped open by this six foot, six inch man who querted, 'What the hell are you doing on my property?'"

The property owner was Larry Turley, a San Francisco physician who had owned the parcel for only a week.

"In an attempt to appease his anger, I offered him some wine that I brought with me," Williams said. "I told him my story and this was the start of a friendship that led eventually to Larry becoming my partner in the winery venture."

Following graduation from Cornell, John enrolled in the U-C Davis enology program and took his first winemaking position in New York State. After three years, he moved back to California to become a winemaker at Spring Mountain Vineyards.

On the side, Turley and Williams were making homemade wine. "By 1981, Larry wanted to make so much wine, I said, 'Go get a license,'" Williams said. "He did just that, then announced to me that we were 50-50 partners."

The partners raised the start-up capital by selling their motorcycles for $5,000 each. That year, they produced the winery's first 700 cases of wine. In 1988, Williams left Spring Mountain to become full-time winemaker at Frog's Leap Winery.

The humorous "frog" label and motto, "Time's fun when you're having flies" together with the word "ribbit" imprinted on each cork, brought immediate attention to the wines.

While well-placed humor continues to attract consumer enthusiasm, Frog's Leap is seriously engaged in organic grapegrowing in its vineyards. The seven growers used as additional sources of fruit are also practicing organic techniques, where among other specifications, composting has replaced organic fertilizer.

Recently, Frog's Leap Winery was officially recognized as a California Certified Organic Farmer.

WINE SELECTIONS OF THE WEEK

Half of Frog's Leap's 24,000 case production is sauvignon blanc. "We're not in the business of turning sauvignon blanc into a chardonnay-style wine," owner/winemaker John Williams emphasizes. "On the other hand, overtly grassy sauvignon blanc is not my preference."

1990 Frog's Leap Winery Sauvignon Blanc ($12) confirms Williams' remark. Bright, melony fruit with pear accents greet the taster. Crisp, pear-like flavors dominate the palate with just the right touch of varietal grassy nuances. The finish is lengthy and flavorful.

1989 Frog's Leap Winery Zinfandel ($14) is approachable and eminently drinkable. "This is our pizza and pasta wine," Julie Williams maintains. Ripe blackberry fruit character with well-married oak make this an appealing and balanced red wine.

All aboard for fine dining Michigan Star Clipper dazzles its guests

Few people know what it's like to travel long distances by train — to sleep in a sleeper car, watch the rails roll away from the observation dome or eat to the rumbling rhythm of the steel wheels in the dining coach. Fewer still can remember a time when doing all those things was the height of elegance.

The speed and low cost of air travel may have robbed the trains of most of their romance, but the elegance still remains thanks to the Michigan Star Clipper.

The Star Clipper, which makes dinner departures several times a week from nearby Walled Lake, takes riders on a four-course, three-hour dining and entertainment experience. Everything about the operation is first class.

The train departs from the Coe Rail station at Pontiac Trail just north of Maple Road, and makes its way west toward Wixom before reversing its course. The excursion then continues east into West Bloomfield Township where the train stops in the serenity of a bird sanctuary alongside Woodpecker Lake before returning home to Walled Lake.

Whether snow blankets the ground, or the leaves are turning, or summer's light allows you to toast the sunset, it's an enchanting ride and a dining atmosphere that's unparalleled.

The Star Clipper came to Walled Lake in August after operating in Paw Paw (near Kalamazoo) for two years. It was then one of three Star Clippers around the country, and the trio had fallen into bankruptcy.

Larry Coe, owner of the Coe Rail Line, bought the Michigan Star Clipper — kitchen car, two dining cars, and all the accessories — from its parent company, and through the work of General Manager Jack Nell and Chef Chris Dewart, it has rolled into the black and blossomed into a success in less than two months.

"It's been quite an experience to get over, but it's been well worth it," says Dewart, who is also food and beverage manager for the train. "We're seeing incredibly different groups of people now."

Whereas the patrons in Paw Paw were primarily tour groups of senior citizens, riders in the Walled Lake location run the gamut.

"I never expected the train could be like this," Dewart says. "I thought it would be real easy, and the diners would be real predictable. We do get our share of tour groups of seniors, but it could also be a tour group of people my age that like to party and just don't want to have to drive home. It's never the same."

He adds, "We have customers who could ride the train every day if they wanted to. But we also have people who save all year to ride. And we have people who come, not for the food or entertainment, but just to ride the train."

Some of the unique customers included a newlywed couple who had eloped, and came aboard in tux and gown — and were greeted with applause from their fellow riders. Another recent guest was race car owner Roger Penske.

Groups can even rent the whole car for an evening party, or corporate groups can secure it for a power lunch that literally has a captive audience.

As one might expect, serving meals on a train presents certain challenges, the most obvious being space. The kitchen — like the dining cars, a 1956 ex-Pennsylvania Railroad piece — is long, but extremely narrow.

"It works very well," says Dewart, who helped custom design the kitchen for a staff of five on every departure. The size of the kitchen, and the fact that it rolls down a set of rails at 8 to 12 mph, limits the menu to a prix-fixe selection of three entrees, which change monthly.

We sampled October's meals of Poached Salmon with crabcorn cakes, and the Roast Pork Loin with apple cider glaze (Prime Rib with au jus and horseradish cream is available year-round). Both meals delightful. The salmon was fresh and firm, and its subtle, velvety

Professional kitchen staff works like a team

The beginning of another great week has arrived. As time goes on things in the restaurant seem to be going smoother. The work is becoming a bit more routine. It has been nice for me. I can spend more of my time visiting with you.

A high school friend came in last weekend. What a treat to see her. She asked what I do in the restaurant. Since it was a busy evening I couldn't go into details (that would take hours) so I replied that I expedite food.

She thought that, as a chef, I cooked food. Well, I do but there are others that help with that.

Laura and Pat are my sous chefs. They are my right and left hands. Then there is Theris and Tom, the grill people; Chris, Rob and Joe at the saute station; Tobin and Mark in the pantry and Sue, Sarah, Dave, Chris and Marko who hold together the back end doing prep and dishes.

After explaining this the questions really started. What in the world is an expeditor?

And all those other terms? "Do you have your own language in the restaurant business?" she asked.

I guess we do. Sous chef is an old, old French term meaning second to the chef. A sous chef assists with cooking, ordering, menu planning, scheduling, hiring and firing. They do it all. It is a very respected position and is a stepping stone to becoming a chef.

The grill, saute and pantry people work on the "front line" versus the "back." Since our kitchen is open they are actors on a stage. The props must be set before the curtain is raised. The pantry is basically a cold food station. Salads, cold appetizers, sandwiches come from this area.

Next in line is the saute section. Most main entrees are prepared here. The word saute means to cook quickly in a shallow, handled pan with the appropriate cooking medium. The medium may be clarified butter (butter with the milk solids removed), olive oil, wine or stock. When it is busy these people fly.

The last station is the grill. All burgers, fried foods and broiler items originate from here. This is not an easy spot to work. The grill is big enough for 30 burgers and buns. It is almost always full. There are two fryers that work constantly with fries, wings, and calamari.

During the week there are three people on the line, on the weekends four. The line itself takes three hours to "set-up" or get ready for business.

During the course of a shift it is re-stocked several times by the people doing prep. Nothing would happen without the prep cooks. They peel huge quantities of onions and carrots daily. The celery even gets peeled to rid it of the strings.

Cases of broccoli are "broken down" to soup. The stems are peeled and used for soup. Actually, in my opinion, the stems are better than buds. They are great raw. Almost sweet.

Stocks are always simmering away on the back stove. A good veal stock takes many, many hours of tender loving care. The results are outstanding. We don't use any bases. The sauces are all derived from rich, flavorful stocks. The taste difference is incredibly good.

All of the desserts are made "in the house" by Sue. The apple pie in phyllo is a best seller and rightly so. Granny Smiths are the apple of choice. Thankfully, we purchased a mechanical apple peeler before opening. What a neat gadget. A suction cup fastens it to the table and three-pronged, fork-like arm holds the apple. Crank the arm and the apple is peeled and sliced at the same time.

The apples are mixed with sugar and spice and layered into individual phyllo shells and baked. They are great.

Cases and cases of Romaine are prepped for use in the Caesar salad. The salad spinner is not like the home variety. It resembles a washing machine on wheels. Plug it in, set the timer and voila! — dry lettuce. It is one of my favorite toys.

Caesar dressing is prepared in huge amounts. A 60-quart mixer was in the kitchen when we took over. It is big enough to ride. A crane is needed to move it. But it sure is a great time saver for mashed potatoes and salad dressings.

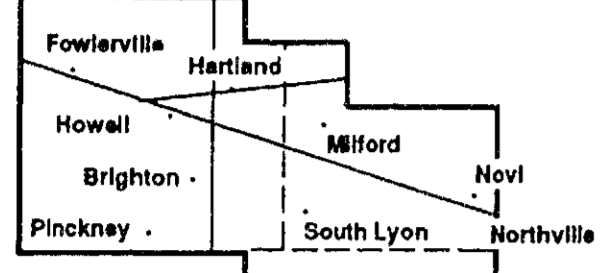

There is a huge grating attachment that fits onto the front of this monster machine that is used to grate fresh parmesan and asiago cheeses. When grating cheese the kitchen smells better than expensive perfume.

On top of all this preparatory work — and I have just touched on it — there are all the pots and pans and utensils that come with it. Someone must constantly wash so we can continue cooking. Thanks go to Dave, Chris and Marko.

So anyway, what is an expeditor? Tune in next week.
