Just horsing around

Haver Hill Farms in Novi provides local suburban youngsters an opportunity to learn horseback riding. Above, Pam Coles, 11, walk her horse, Rocky, into the barn at the end of her lesson. Pam has been riding only about one month and this was her first time working with Rocky. At right, a 12-year-old youngster looks like an old pro as she works with her horse, Quicksilver, in the indoor arena.

Family walks a road of tears, pain

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the fourth in a series of articles dealing with two lawsuits filed against the Novi Community School District. The suits allege that district employees' actions contributed to the suffering a Novi High School sophomore expertenced when a volunteer diving coach twice sexually assaulted her in the fall of 1987.

That student, Victoria Carlesco, and her mother Anna shared their story with Novi News Copy Editor Rick Byrne and Staff Writer Randy Coble. Their personal account continues next week.

By RANDY COBLE

Mrs. Carlesco, you've said that you didn't like the way the district handled this from day one. What reaction did they give you?

Anna: When they told me about this, the first question from them to me was: "Do you want to call the police on this?" I felt that that was a very uncharacteristic type of question from an official to a parent, knowing full well what had (just) happened. I was surprised at the innuendo, the tone.

The way they said it was like, You want to put your kid through this? You really want to talk to the police?"

Was this a school counselor?

Anna: Yes, it was.

Victoria: She was just like: "Well. whatever you want to do. It'll all be done in a month. You won't hear about this anymore. Life will go on. Vicki will get over it."

Anna: I said (to the counselor) that what concerns me was how the school was going to handle this. What will be done? That's when she told me that it would all be over in a towards you?

Anna: They told me they basically felt that it was not something they could sweep under the table. For three days they (two swim team coaches) knew; they did not tell me. When she (Victoria) was starting to have real problems, that's when they called me.

It wasn't going away. If it had gone away, who knows? The question in my mind is how many times does it get swept under the rug? The unfortunate thing is that the aftermath, the reaction, the consequences - all of that is what you have to live with and it doesn't go away.

Nobody wanted to deal with it?

Trends paint path to a 21st century Novi

By RANDY COBLE

Novi's on the move - and for the most part in all the right directions.

A report city planning department staffers and consultants put together - released last month paints a picture of a city growing in development, population and a host of other factors. Novi, in fact, leads or is close to leading the southeastern Michigan area in several categories.

The city's building department confirmed that trend with its own report as well. Novi led the sevencounty region in residential home construction last year, keeping city staffers busy.

"The building activity for the fis-

Residents in the Roma Ridge exited onto Beck Road. subdivision are distributing 500 warning fliers following a possible child abduction attempt in their neighborhood Sunday, Aug. 8.

Police are currently looking for the unidentified suspects, and a bulletin has been sent to police departments around the area in an attempt to locate them.

According to the fliers and police reports, two males believed to be in their 20s stopped on Roma Ridge Drive around 5 p.m. and asked two 4-year-old boys if they "wanted to go for a ride." The children ran away and went to their parents.

The suspects then reportedly fled northbound on Roma Ridge "at a high rate of speed" and probably rive adult witnesses at the scene described the car as a dull red, midto late-1980s Camaro Z28 with a wide yellow stripe along the sides. The car was further described as poorly maintained, with a loud exhaust, dirty windows and dirty license plate. The car had a black 'bra" on the front end. One witness said she believed the license may have included the letters U and M.

Lake Study group on hunt for funds

By JAN JEFFRES Staff Writer

Ed Phelps is leading a group of 14 Novi residents who have their hands out

Armed with a budget of precisely zero, the Walled Lake Sector Study Implementation Committee is managing to make progress by begging funds from other City of Novi committees, Phelps, the group's chairman, said last week. "It's tough to do anything here with no money. Our main concern is to get the committees that do have money and hopefully encourage them to contribute," he added. "Starting with nothing, I think we're accomplishing a lot." A recent coup was the $18,000 in Community Development Block Grant money wrangled from the Housing and Community Development Committee with City Council approval. The fund will pay for preliminary design and engineering worked needed for safety path construction along East Lake Drive and South Lake Drive. These federal

Continuity is part of good city planning

It is a troubling beginning for the new membership of the Novi Planning

The Country Hills Children's Center, proposed for construction on the north side of Thirteen Mile Road west of Decker, first received site plan approval Government and a special land use permit (originally as the Novi Nursery School) from the commission in 1991. The facility hasn't April of this year,

As believable. he did, a Woods of Novi resident came forward to object to the whole project and

Duck fancying says a lot

scribe Northville to my friends from other states, I tell them about the popularity of ducks

In my mind, ducks are the perfect metaphor for the place I grew up in, and Northville's worship of the little animals seems to encapsulate the spirit of a place I'm never quite sure how to characterize.

Beyersdorf It's not always accurate to call Northville a small town. I have friends from West Union, Ohio, who would call Northville a pooming metropolis. And while I used to describe Northville as pretty rural, I realized everything is relative when my roommate told me she was related to everyone in her county. So, instead of describing my home by size, I now tell my friends about the ducks here: how we have our own colony of them at the old Ford Plant and how traffic will stop dutifully as they cross the road; how most homes in the area have incorporated ducks into their main decorative scheme; how ducks are on nearly every piece of Northville memorabilia that the busloads of tourists buy downtown on weekend outings or at one of the assorted festivals Northville hosts every year. How even my own family has a duck phone that quacks instead of rings. Some people I tell about the ducks have no idea what it reveals about Northville. "Yeah, but what's your town like? Is it big or small? What are the people like?" they still ask after my duck tales. Most of these people are from New York or Chicago or other regions diametrically opposed to places like Northville. They don't see the implications of our concern for fuzzy fowl. They don't see how the fact that people here revere ducks tells them anything about the place. I wish I could bring some of these friends home with me for a summer. If they lived here for three months they'd no doubt realize the parallel between our fascination with ducks and the fact that people in Northville seem to know everything that's going on with each other, that even after three years away at school I can still walk into Arbor Drugs and run into six people I know, and that no matter if there is rioting in Los Angeles, a massive drug problem in Detroit, or un speakable brutality in Bosnia I can always count on there being 10 people in line (four of them in baseball uni forms) at Custard Time.

I don't always think that concern for ducks (and all of those unexplainable aspects of this community wrapped up in that de scription) is necessarily one of Northville's most positive traits. In contrast to some of the more pressing world and national concerns, life in Northville seems pretty cocoonisth sometimes. But it does give me a warm, safe feeling when I'm here.

Working at tibe newspaper this summer pretty much means immersion in the duck-loving spirit that's so much a part of Northvil le's character. Nearly every press release or engagement ar mouncement I've typed this summer, for example, involves some family I know. And after doing a couple of stories on graduates of NHS.

I feel like a local cel ebrity myself. I got a note from a former high school English a teacher and a call from my under-12 soccer coach after each of them read something I wrote. Of course, along with the comments and encouragement come the inevitable, suggestions for story ideas. The most classic orne was from my mom, who was all excited after returning from the July 4th parade - another one of those annual I Vorthville traditions included in all that ducks stand for it i my mind. She'd witnessed a group of about 10 people rescue (what else) eight ducklings who had fallen through the grates in a sewer. She thought it'd be perfect for a story in The Northville Record - and she was probably right.

As an aspiring, serious-minded journalist, however, I failed to share her exciten tent at the prospect of a breaking story on duck-rescuing. But I did get an additional anecdote for my method of hometown description. And a reminder of why I love Northville's cocoon so much. Long live ducks.

When a cat exposes its underside, it is signaling that it trusts those in its presence.

America's favorite pets remain kittens at heart

By CRISTINA FERRIER Staff Writer

The cats are taking over.

With an estimated 57.6 million domestic cats to 54 million domestic dogs in the United States, cats have usurped the latter species' title of "man's best friend." Or, at least, they can lay claim to being the most

Cat lovers list many reasons for the popularity of their feline friends. Besides being furry and warm and cuddly and soft, they also require less care

Cats are usually litter trained in a matter of hours or days, while some dogs can take years to learn the ins and outs of housebreaking.

If one is planning to leave home for a few days, a cat can take care of itself if left with a proper supply of food and water. And a cat will never chase the mailman, keep the neighbors awake with its barking, or chew up your favorite pair of shoes.

There is even evidence that shows cat owners tend to be healthier than other people. Friendly physical contact with cats has been shown to reduce stress. Cat owners have been wired in scientific laboratories to test their biological responses as they stroke their pets, and it was found that their body systems relaxed significantly. It has also been found that violent, mentally ill patients often calm down when they are near a pet cat. And in an early-1980s study of stress-related heart problems, researchers discovered that cat ownership sometimes lowered blood pressure.

Yet there are still dog lovers or, perhaps, cat haters, who dispute the value of kitties. They point to the unquestioning loyalty of dogs — their desire to protect their owners and to learn silly tricks at their master's whim. Some are even so gauche as to point out that cats will claw up the furniture or litter your front porch with dead mice. But in the book Cat Watching by Desmond Morris, many of the animals' most perplexing habits are explained and, the author points out, many of a cat's actions show an intense loyalty and love toward their human owners, Morris, an animal expert and zoologist, spent years observing domestic and wild cats to gain an understanding of their odd behaviors.

"The domestic cat is a contradiction," he writes in the book's introduction. "No animal has developed such an intimate relationship with mankind, while at the same time demanding and getting such independence of movement and action. The dog may be man's best friend, but it is rarely allowed out on its own to wander from garden to garden or street to street. The obedient dog has to be taken for a walk. The headstrong cat walks Cats, which have been domesticated for 3,500 years, live and react in a way that bounces between that of an overgrown kitten to that of a fierce hunter in the wild, Morris writes. Much of their behavior can be attributed to either of those kitty mind-sets.

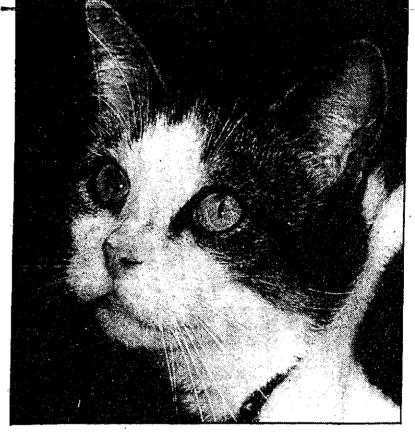

For example, why does a cat purt? Most people believe that a cat purts because it is happy, but Morris writes that cats in great pain, injured, in labor or even dying have often been known to purr loudly for long periods of Purring, instead, comes from a primal instinct that goes back to the time when the cat was a tiny kitten. Kittens begin to purr when they are just one week old and it usually occurs while they are suckling. Their purring acts as a signal to the mother that all is well. The mother cat can listen to their purring and know without looking that her babies are all there and everything is fine.

When the kittens grow up, they continue to purr when they are feeling friendly and social or, in the case of an injured cat, they need care and attention.

An adult cat is a cross between a helpless kitten and a fierce hunter. It is able to hear in the ultrasonic range far above the human ear: to smell scents undetectable to the human nose; and to see in one-sixth of the light required for the human eye.

Salon owner works toward AIDS research

By DOROTHY NASH Special Writer

Whether or not you have contributed money for AIDS research, you have a special opportunity to do so during the Victorian Festival, Sept. 17 through 19, between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m., at Baiardi's Hair Salon on Center Street in Northville.

And you will get something personal in return. Tammy Hambrick, who is a stylist and public relations head of the 17 employees at the salon, said that all of them will be available at staggered hours taken off from their scheduled appointments - indoors and out, depending on the weather — to do things for you like recutting or restyling bangs and applying tattoos (the semi-permanent kind that are removable with baby oil.)

All you do is make a contribution for AIDS research. You name the amount.

Then there will be a display of Victorian hats made by Tammy's co-workers. You are invited to vote for the one you like the best - putting your name in a fishbowl and making an AIDS contribution. The Victorian hats will be on display in the salon windows, starting Aug. 22. You may vote that early rather than wait until Festival days. On the last day of the festival, names will be drawn from the fish like a manicure, mini-facial, haircut, and hair products. Of course if you want to buy one of the hats, you are welcome to make an bowl and prizes awarded -- prizes

The red-ribbons pin you will receive for your contribution says, "Gift for life" on its face and also "fighting AIDS through research and education."

The parent organization for the charity, Tammy said, is AMFAR (American Foundation for Aids research) located in Miami.

Incidentally, the owner of Baiardi's, Tammy said, will match the total amount contributed.

The Duchess is just another farmhouse...not!

By James McAlexander Copley News Service

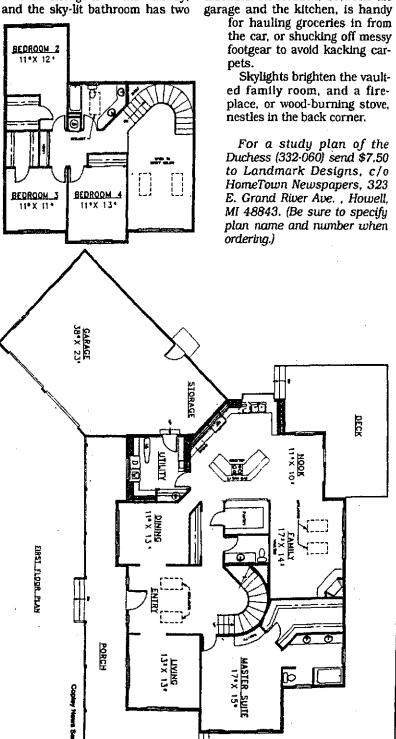

From outside, the Duchess looks like a basic country-style home, a little on the large size. But a closer look at the exterior, and a glance inside the lofty sky-lit foyer tells you that this is no old-fashioned farmhouse.

The wide wraparound front porch is country, but the wide custom door isn't. It's flanked by sidelights and crowned, on the second floor level, by a huge haU-round window. This wealth of glass increases street appeal and combines with the skylights to create a strikingly bright entry area. Add a few potted kees, and you've got an atrium.

With an endless list of vital tasks to insure a healthy crop, it hardly seems fair that the bugs are the first to taste the fruits of your labor.

Insect pests are the foil to heroic gardening efforts. Consider the garden a summer-long movie, and these little guys are the villains. Like any good protagonist, if your efforts are to be a success, the bad guys have got to go.

But before you play the part of a pesticide Rambo with these dastardly destructors, you have to remember every action has a reaction. Dousing you garden with sprays and poisons may work in the short term, but there are detrimental effects.

Pesticides kill the bad guys, but they also kill all the beneficial insects, including the ones that eat the pests. Pesticides build up on your crops, they are a danger to annimals and children, and if used enough they can seep into the groundwater.

Not to mention the fact that bugs can develop resistence to pesticides. The ones you don't kill breed hordes of superbugs that shrug off the effects of the pesticide with a sinister laugh between tomato-leaf bites — and there aren't any good bugs left to stop them (they perished as collateral damage., remember?).

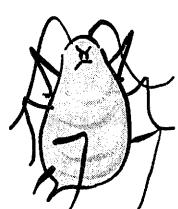

So what exactly can you do? How about not only having a green thumb, but a green mentality as well.

There are many ways to control garden pests without touching a bottle of insecticide. One of the best ways to stop the little villains is to attract natural predators. Birds, in particular, are great at munching your troubles away.

Planting bright wildflowers around and in you garden attracts predatory birds, as does leaving cracked corn and sunflower seeds around the area. Birds come in for the bait and discover a buffet of tasty bugs.

Gardening for your pets

By C.Z. Guest Copley News Service

If you're a pet-owning gardener, chances are you've spent hours in hot pursuit of a mischievous cat or dog that has chewed up (or eaten completely) your favorite houseplant, garden flower or vegetable. Instead of struggling to keep the rascals out, I suggest that you plant a garden expressly for your animal friends.

Since most animals require a certain amount of greens in their diets, it's best to provide some for nutrition purposes. This will keep them from invading your garden or houseplants.

A "pet" garden could either be a small patch or container inside, or both.

Find your pets' personal preference (you may know from bitter experience). But, in general, you can count on certain plants to appeal to your animal, such as a bit of the variety that your dog is always going after in your garden.

 Suggested dog gardens: a patch of bare soil for digging; oats- dogs love to munch on them; "dog hole" in hot weather—dogs will dust themselves with the dry soil; a patch of fescue for grazing.

 Suggested cat garden: Plant catnip, also oats.

GARDENING

Cats prefer the young, tender leaves of oats, so plant for successive sowings. If you plant catnip in the garden, start with a few plants in an isolated area, as it tends to take over!

A few plants will make even a stuffy old feline feel his oats and act like a kitten again!

There also are kits of "cat grass" available through some catalogs. These make marvelous presents for cat-owning friends. Some catalogs also offer containers that will sprout birdseed in the cage for your flying friends. After all, birds need their delicacies, too!

· Rabbits: are much less choosy about their garden delicacies; they'll munch on just about anything in your regular vegetable garden, so plant their garden with a good mix of legumes and leafy greens.

WONDERFUL ROSES

The 1993 crop of All-American Rose Selections awardwinners promises to be a standout in home gardens from coast to coast. Exciting color is here, along with the elegance of classic rose flower form.

And these rose bushes are

Realty firm finds Northville niche

By RICK BYRNE Copy Editor

Sometimes small is better. That's what Jerry Delaney figured a year and a half ago when he opened J.A. Delancy and Co. real estate in Northville. His hunch has proven correct as the firm has grown into such diverse areas that the breadth of service belies the quaint exterior of its quarters, a restored home at the corner of Rayson and Center streets.

Though Delaney started off manlopments, he recently added commercial property management to his menu, years ahead of schedule.

The company coordinates and supervises maintenance and repairs, collects rents, pays utilities, insurance and taxes, and provides the commercial side of it.

"I had some plans to do commercial management after a couple of years when I opened this company 18 months ago, "said Delaney. "But I got to talking with Peter and he said why "Ther not do it now?"

Light came to Delaney a year ago. after eight years with a large commercial development firm in the area.

In addition to the newspaper, the 8,700-square-foot building houses the Bookstall on the Main, First Impressions Landscape Design and the offices of Philip Oglivie, attorney. The red brick building has been a land-mark in Northville since its construction in 1921.

J.A. Delaney and Co. also has aging single-family homes as income joined forces with The Smith Comproperties and condominium deven Anne Smith. A Northville resident and a licensed builder since 1987.
