CLARKSTON

Edgar Clark comforts his wife as best as he can from hundreds of miles away as the Civil War rages on. His letter, written from the rifle pits near the Anna River, just north of Richmond, Va., is dated May 26, 1864.

"My dear wife, I received a letter form you dated May 14 in which you said you never expected to hear from me again. You must not give up so easily as that. If you do, you will not enjoy yourself as much I am afraid. We have not been in much danger since I wrote to you last. Although we advanced down to this river and gained a very important point where the rebels tried their best to let us come down, we were bound to stay and we did. They shot a good many balls at us from their cannons and rifles but that could not scare us although we lost about a dozen men in killed and wounded. We are now about 25 miles from Richmond. When we will get there it will be hard to tell for the rebels are in strong force about a mile from us behind strong works which it will be hard to get them out of. William wanted I should tell you he killed a rebel yesterday. He has got a sharp target rifle which will kill a man as far as you can see. He went out on the skirmish line and got a good aim at one and after he shot he saw four men carrying a man off.

"Some nights we will advance and then build breastworks and fortify our position and work all night. There has not been a day but what we have had our knapsacks on since we left camp. I cannot write you as often as I wish. You must not worry about me for I will try to take good care of myself and you must do the same. Your loving husband, Edgar Clark."

Fun Daze, Crop Walk focus on food, fun

On Saturday, anyone with a taste for raspberry pie, "blooming onions" or one of dozens of other delicious treats needs to go no farther than downtown Clarkston.

And when they're done, they can stop by dentist Robert Bice's office to get their black or orange toothbrush.

Even the dentist's office is open late for Fall Fun Daze. The second annual event is sponsored by the Clarkston Area Chamber of Commerce and the Independence Township Parks and Recreation Department. It runs from 4:30 p.m.- 9 p.m. and is a fund-raiser for the two organizations.

Last year's inaugural event drew approximately 2,000 to downtown Clarkston. That number is expected to double this year, chamber executive director Penny Shanks said.

The event is a melding of two previously separate activities. The Parks and Recreation Department used to sponsor Taste of Independence each summer at Bay Court Park. The other event was the annual foot races each spring.

Last year the races were postponed and Parks and Recreation Director Ann Conklin approached the chamber about combining the activities. Fun Daze, which includes Taste of Clarkston, was the result. It meant about $2,000 each for the chamber and parks and recreation. The money was used for Fourth of July fireworks, Concerts in the Park, the community website and other programs.

Fall Fun Daze brings families downtown to enjoy food, music and children's games, Shanks said. Twenty-one restaurants are scheduled to participate this year, up from 14 last year.

"The success of last year helped us sell it this year," she said.

Several bigger restaurants have joined the roster, including Outback Steakhouse, Don Pablos and Big Buck Brewery & Steakhouse.

"They are located a little farther out, but their clientele is from Clarkston," Shanks said.

LIFE ON THE EDGE

Living in two communities can be challenging

BY SALLY SLAUGHTER

It would be easy to understand why the Reed family might have an identity crisis, but teetering between the City of the Village of Clarkston and Independence Township mostly means detailed directions to pizza delivery people, relatives and other assorted visitors.

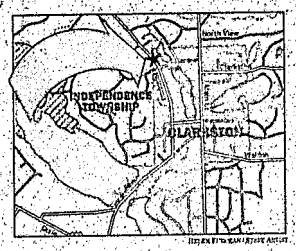

Straddling two municipalities can be a precarious position to be in if you don't like predictable, albeit minor annoyances.

"You do a lot of explaining to people," Kathy Reed said.

The Reeds — who also include husband Butch and sons Daniel, 14, Christopher, 8, Andrew, 6, and Thomas, 3 — say its easier just to say they live on the upper mill pond.

But for those who must have an

Divided properties have history back to the 1920s

Lots that split up into two communities are fairly common, said Bob Vandermark, manager of the equalization division of Oakland County.

He said years ago, particularly in the 1920s and '30s, farmland was bought by developers and divided into lots. These lots were usually earmarked for resort developments along lakes. Some of the lot splits simply crossed over boundary lines, Vandermark said.

"You can't tell a property owner where they can own land," he said. "They have a right to own property on both sides of the line."

Vandermark confirmed residents who own land that crosses into two communities have to deal with both sides whenever they want to redevelop the land or contest the property taxes.

"It just requires coordination (between the two communities)," he said.

Speaker: Kids drink, do drugs 'cuz parents do

BY JAN BAKER
SPECIAL WRITER

For too many Clarkston parents, it's just too tough to look in the mirror at our own behavior.

So we don't.

But according to drug prevention expert Milton Creagh, we're the reason that there's a youth drug problem in Clarkston — and in America. We're well-intentioned blue-collar workers, white-collar professionals, churchgoers, soccer moms and PTA members — and we drink too much alcohol.

The poorest to the most affluent among us use illegal drugs.

And we're overindulging our children with material possessions to the point that many of our children no longer value anything that doesn't come with a designer label or an ignition key.

That was the unvarnished word from drug prevention expert Milton Creagh, who spoke to about 350 parents and teens at the Clarkston High School auditorium last Thursday.

According to Creagh, an honest look at American families regularly shows that "parents are the biggest drug industry" and the No. 1 reason adolescents use alcohol and other drugs. Teens in Clarkston — and in the rest of the United States — are simply modeling behavior they've seen their own parents display over and over.

Sponsored by the Clarkston Community Task Force for Youth and Clarkston Schools, the 6-feet, 7-inch Georgia speaker spent the day in Clarkston, speaking with secondary students during the day and then addressing parents in the evening. During his night-time presentation, he shot forth his observations with a Southern Baptist preaching style and a self-deprecating sense of humor.

He essentially told Clarkston parents to wake up and start facing reality.

Push is on to prevent home fires

BY SUSAN B. TAUBER
STAFF WRITER
staubert@oe.homecomm.net

Local fire officials want residents to bring the topic of fire prevention to their family dinner tables during Fire Prevention Week.

The nationally designated week begins Sunday, Oct. 3, and continues through Saturday, Oct. 9.

Both Springfield and Independence township fire departments plan to bring fire prevention education to the community.

The Springfield Township Fire Department will visit fourth and fifth grade students at Andersonville and Springfield Plains elementary schools to promote fire safety.

It's also sponsoring Fire Drills; the Great Escape! at 7 p.m. Wednesday, Oct. 6.

Here's how that program works: The fire department is asking families, in advance, to work on their fire escape plans for their residence. Then, when the fire siren goes off at 7 p.m. next Wednesday, families are to try out their fire escape plan. The idea is to be sure the plan works and that every family member is familiar with it in case of a real fire.

"Most people underestimate fire's power and speed," said Springfield Township Fire Chief Charles Oaks. "In the best case, you only have just one or two minutes to escape a typical home fire safely. Home fire escape planning and practice are critical to life safety because they ensure that everyone

"We are losing the war on drugs," he said. "I really don't care what anybody in (Washington) D.C. tells you. I don't care what anybody in the State House tells you. If they tell you anything other than this right now, they're lying."

Creagh said that while all national and regional drug prevention efforts thus far have been aimed at children in schools — the D.A.R.E. program, "Red Ribbon Week" and the "Just Say No" campaign — those endeavors haven't worked. Kids are still drinking at 15 and getting high on cocaine at 18.

The drug prevention scenario plays out the same in Clarkston, he said.

Even so, parents continue to expect drug prevention advocates to keep beating the same broken drum. Parents in Clarkston are no different.

"The reality of it is — the basic reason you brought me into this town — was to say to your kids, 'Don't use drugs. Stay away from drugs,'" Creagh said. "And I'm convinced that's exactly why we're losing this war."

The speaker told audience members in a booming voice that he has spoken to between 500,000 and 600,000 teenagers a year for the past 14 years. That prevention experience showed him that teenagers aren't the cause of the youth drug problem. Parents are.

"Most of you adults have not had the chance to see what happens when I work with a group of kids," Creagh said. "Typically, it's like what happened at your high school today. I talk to the kids for about an hour to an hour and a half. During the first 10 minutes of the program, it's quiet enough in the room that you can hear a pencil drop.

"When I'm finished talking to the kids, I usually can't leave the room for at least an hour or so. How come? Because so many of your kids come up to me in tears. So many of your kids come up to me looking for help. And so many kids go to counselors after the program.

"The thing that's blown me away in the 14 years that I've done this ... is that when kids stick around and want to talk to me after the program, when kids give me their phone numbers, their e-mail addresses, the No. 1 thing kids talk to me about is not their friends using. And it's not about them using. The No. 1 thing that your children came to me in tears to talk about today was about their mom and dad using."

Creagh explained to the crowd that U.S. adults consume more than half of the world's illegal drugs. In stark contrast, Americans represent only about 5 percent of the world's population.

"Parents are the biggest drug industry ... We are the junkies of the world — bar none," he said.

The speaker went on to say that 74 percent of illegal drug users in the United States are in the work force — and 70 percent of those workers are employed at full-time jobs. Students certainly don't fit that category, he said. But their parents do.

Because a lot of parental drug usage goes on behind closed doors and because many parents abuse alcohol and other drugs and still outwardly function well, Creagh told the Clarkston audience to be vigilant. He advised them to really get to know the parents of their children's closest friends. He said it was a mistake to assume that people with lofty positions, economic means, religious affiliations or manicured lawns don't abuse alcohol or snort cocaine.

"Research tells us that the No. 1 place that children use drugs is in the home of a friend," the prevention expert said. "The No. 1 place where kids have sex is at somebody's house. And the children in your community know whose house they can go to and get high, whose house to go to and have sex with the least possible chance of getting caught."

When Creagh asked teens in the audience to raise their hands if they knew of such homes in the community, most of the adolescents did so.

He then described three kinds of homes where children go to drink alcohol, take drugs or have sex:

- A house where mom and dad are never around between 3-6 p.m.
- A house where mom and dad "are clueless wonders" — denying problems exist in order to "look good to the neighbors."
- A house where mom and dad don't care. They love their kids, but they don't think teen drinking or occasional drug use is a big deal. "We did it when we were their age. It's just a phase,"

Creagh also advised parents to stop throwing money at their kids.

"Just because you can afford it, doesn't mean that you or your child needs it," he said. "Every kid who turns 16 doesn't need a car. This is a beautiful high school, but you couldn't pay me to work here. In this school, the kids' cars are so much better than the teachers' cars, it's frightening. Mom and Dad, have you thought about what that says to your kids? Here's someone who's supposed to be helping to guide them to their future.

"But you know what some kids are thinking? 'What can you teach me? You ain't got nothin.' I'm livin' larger than you right now.'"

Creagh said Clarkston parents need to learn the word, "No."

He advised them to start listening to their children, holding them accountable for their choices, and setting rules and boundaries.

But above all, the speaker said parents need to start looking into that mirror.

Creagh said research from the American Foundation for Drug Prevention in Fort Worth says that one of the most important things parents can do to keep their kids drug-free is to be drug-free themselves. That includes alcohol.

"Now the reality is, I know I'm not going to be able to get everyone in this room to put down their Johnnie Walker," he said. "I know that. I understand that. I've accepted that — even though I don't want to — I've accepted that. What I'm going to suggest to you is that if you are not going to give up alcoholic beverages, mom and dad, you sure better have some rules in your life about how you consume alcohol.

"I'm going to suggest a few rules to you. No. 1: You never get drunk. You never, ever, ever, ever, ever get drunk. This doesn't mean, you never get drunk in front of your kids. It means, you never get drunk.

"And you never go for a drink when you have problems ... Be a model for your kids. Watch the example you set."

Creagh creates a stir in Clarkston

BY JAN BAKER
SPECIAL WRITER

After drug prevention expert Milton Creagh ended his hard-hitting evening presentation at Clarkston High School last Thursday, parents exited the room and then swept up every last one of the speaker's books and pamphlets displayed on hallway tables.

The blunt speaker — who blamed Clarkston parents for the youth drug problem in Clarkston — seemed to be a hit with the very segment he was blaming.

However, during Creagh's daytime visits to seventh- and eighth-graders at Clarkston and Sashabaw middle schools, as well as at CHS, some students broke down and cried. Others walked out.

Apparently, the "tough-as-toenails" approach wasn't for everybody.

Clarkston schools' Superintendent Dr. Al Roberts pointed out that school officials did send home a note to parents about Creagh's frank presentation before the speaker came to Clarkston so that parents could choose to have their children excused from the lecture.

Creagh's presentations did, indeed, trigger some deep emotions, Roberts said. But tough times often demand tough, yet appropriate, talk.

■ 'We don't have any more kids that we can lose. Even if it offends someone, we need to get the (prevention) message out.'

Al Roberts
Clarkston Schools superintendent

"We don't have any more kids that we can lose," he said. "Even if it offends someone, we need to get the (prevention) message out."

Diane St. Peter, a member of the Clarkston Community Task Force for Youth, agreed with Roberts.

"It was a different kind of prevention message, but there is a denial in this community that has to be broken through," St. Peter said.

The drug prevention activist said that in order for a community effort to be successful, vast numbers of parents and children have to subscribe to the same "intolerance for substance-abuse" message. So getting the message out in an auditorium of 350 people was an important step.

Ann Jefferies, PTA president for Sashabaw Middle School and a former nurse, said she attended Creagh's presentations at both middle schools and at CHS. Though she saw "many students — perhaps 40" walk out of the Clarkston Middle School presentation, Jefferies called the CMS lecture "straightforward and informative — and the least likely of the three presentations to upset anyone."

She said she was "extremely pleased" with Creagh's talks at all three secondary schools.

"I felt that sixth-graders could have handled it (the presentation)," Jefferies said. "I don't know why so many kids got up and left (the room) at Clarkston Middle School. I was very happy that the Task Force brought in Milton Creagh. Any and all information on drug prevention is good."

Dennis Kaszeta, president of the Task Force, said that though Creagh's message upset some people, the general response was positive.

"He engendered parents and kids to think about their own lifestyles," Kaszeta said. "A lot of the things he said, we already know, but we still need to hear it as a community."

Children's Village aide had 'heart of a hero'

BY CAROLYN WALKER
STAFF WRITER

Many Waterford School District employees and Michigan students from all walks of life are mourning the passing of one of their long-time favorites this week.

Kathleen Sue "Kathie" McPheters, 63, of Independence Township, an instructional assistant for Oakland County's Children's Village School for 31 years, died Sunday following a battle with cancer.

McPheters received Waterford's 1999 Betty Campion Distinguished Support Service Award last spring. The annual award recognizes the dedication and achievements of support personnel within the Waterford School District. Children's Village School is administered by Waterford schools.

McPheters was nominated by her principal, Bonne Dutton, who, with other employees, had high praise for McPheters. All described the woman as a tireless and selfless worker.

McPheters was a "legend" at the school where delinquent or neglected court-placed children from across Michigan, ages 5 to 18, are educated, said Dutton on Tuesday.

"(She had the) ability to make everyone, staff or children, feel they were important. She was always the goodwill lady. She did everything and wanted nothing. She had the heart of a hero."

"She wouldn't let anybody feel like they weren't worth it," added office manager Chris Peters. "There wasn't anybody she didn't feel like she could work with. She laughed with everyone and cried with everyone."

McPheters was hired to work in the school in June 1968 and retired last April when her health began to decline. She had bravely fought, and come back from, cancer on other occasions, Dutton said.

McPheters is survived by her husband, Bill, and daughter, Debi (Joe) Mento of Brandon Township. She was the sister of John (Mary) Bates, Fred Bates, Jeff (Ginger) Bates and Bob (Nancy) Bates, all of Ohio. She was pre-deceased by her sister, Rosalie (Berkie) Berkshire. McPheters is also survived by several nieces and nephews. She was an active member of the Clarkston Eagles.

Funeral arrangements were entrusted to the Lewis E. Wint & Son Funeral Home with the Pastor E. Dale Evanson officiating. It was suggested that memorials be made to the Cranbrook Hospice or Karmanos Cancer Institute.

Give her your opinion four ways for Sunday.

And four ways for Thursday, as well.

One fun fund-raiser

Students exercise to gather annual PTA dollars

For an hour on Friday, students sprinted around the Springfield Plains Elementary School parking lot for a good cause - themselves.

The yearly Fun Run is the school's PTA's single fund-raiser. Children receive pledges from family and friends for each lap around the parking lot, parent coordinator Kathy Noble said.

Noble said parents love the event because their kids won't have to pester friends, relatives and co-workers to buy peanut brittle or kitchen calendars from catalogs. The kids love it because they get to go outside and run around the one-eighth mile "track."

■ "We do it in the first part of the (school) year," and then no one has to be bothered with fund raising for the rest of the year.

Kathy Noble — Parent coordinator

Noble said the event prevents children from going door to door and is great exercise.

"We do it in the first part of the (school) year," Noble said, and then no one has to be bothered with fund raising for the rest of the year.

With 600 kindergarten through fifth grade students this year, Noble had 87 parent volunteers.

Last year the children raised $16,000. Noble didn't have a total amount raised for this year yet.

Children in preschool through first grade, then grades 2-3 and finally in grades 4-5 take their turn running in 20-minute shifts to "cool" music, Noble said.

Physical education teacher and principal Sharon Devereaux all get into the act. Even Devereaux's Labrador retriever gets some exercise.

"Barney runs laps, too," Noble said. "He gets pledges."

When it's all over, students get a treat of cookies and sports drinks donated by local businesses.

The PTA pays for many activities such as family nights at school. Each class also received $300 per year to help pay for field trips.

Noble said Springfield's idea has spread to two other Clarkston schools. Now Independence and Clarkston elementary schools have Fun Runs of their own.

Woman buys graves to help needy families

BY SALLY SLAUGHTER
STAFF WRITER
sslaughter@oe.homecomm.net

■ INDEPENDENCE

One Independence Township resident didn't care that rates for grave plots were slated to jump by $100. She still wanted to buy 90 of them and give them to the poor. At the new rates, that computes to a $42,750 investment.

Despite her generosity, the woman wanted to remain anonymous.

"I told her I'd keep it in confidence," said George Anderson, Department of Public Works director.

He said she has already purchased 20 grave sites.

Supervisor Dale Stuart called her gesture one from a "generous heart and a kind idea."

But the woman won't have a chance to pacify her charitable urge after Independence Township Board action Sept. 21. The price of a final resting place went up, and a new policy limits the number of graves one person or family can buy.

The township board increased the prices of cemetery plots and related services. The new policy limits a single buyer to two lots with the assumption that six full graves fit on the average lot, DPW Assistant Director Linda Richardson said.

She said the policy was one that needed to be instituted because Lakeview Cemetery only has about 2,000 spaces left.

The 29-acre cemetery at the corner of Dixie Highway and White Lake Road dates to 1850. Richardson said some people buy plots in their name and then deed them to non-resident relatives or others as a way to save money.

"This just reiterates our policy," she said, that the cemetery is for township residents and their families.

"Our concern was we wanted to have spaces for township residents," she said.

The price increase still means Lakeview Cemetery is less expensive than nearby private cemeteries.

A full grave plot is now $475, up from $350. Non-residents will pay $680, up from $475. The cost to buy an infant grave stayed the same at $75 for residents and non-residents. The opening and closing of infant graves also remained at $75.

Cremation sites and opening and closing of the grave held steady at $75 each.

Disinterments are now more at $500 instead of $400. These procedures are rare, however, and only two have been done in the past 25 years.

Weekend and holiday burials cost more on top of the normal rate. A Saturday burial costs $200 more than the weekday rate and burials on Sundays or holidays cost $275 more. Those are increased from $150 and $200, respectively. Families who want a tent at the cemetery ceremony have to pay $50, which has not changed.

Burial service includes digging the grave, setting up, then afterward lowering the vault into the ground, sealing it, filling in the grave and re-sodding the area.

"There are a lot of unseen things that go into it," Richardson added.

Cemetery rates were last raised in November 1994.

CHS band places 4th; nabs 'Best Music' award

BY JAN BAKER
SPECIAL WRITER

Sure, Fred Astaire could glide seamlessly across the floor with a hat rack in his hands.

But did he ever try marching briskly across 40 yards of uneven turf while playing a tuba that weighs more than Ginger Rogers?

Some members of the Clarkston High School Marching Band have been doing just that.

The band kicked off its invitational season Saturday at Linden High School with a fourth-place overall finish and a special honor: a tie with first-place Milford High School in the category of "Best Music." This year's CHS musical program is, "The Music of John Rutter."

Here are the results from the Linden Invitational's Flight I competition. (Flight I participants represent high schools with a student population of 1,430 or more):

- First Place: Milford — 73.10 points
- Second Place: Troy Athens — 61.35 points (won a "Visual Effects" tie-breaker with Lake Orion)
- Third Place: Lake Orion — 61.35 points

(Milford garnered citation awards for "Best Marching" and "Best General Effect," and tied with Clarkston for "Best Music.")

In a brief phone interview Monday, Cliff Chapman, director of the CHS Marching Band, remarked that he was pleased with the band's performance.

"I think the kids did very well," Chapman said.

The band's biggest area for improvement? "Individual confidence," he said.

Chapman pointed out that while a 214-member band may look and sound great as one big entity on a football field, it's also judged on its individual instrument sounds and marching movements. So having a big marching band is both an asset (in sheer field presence) and a liability (in that a larger number of students have to be in tune and in line.)

Esther Rose, vice-president of the CHS Band Boosters, agreed with Chapman that the band represented Clarkston well.

"I was extremely pleased with the quality of the music they played and I thought they did extremely well with the marching and the presentation," Rose said. "I was a little disappointed with the score, but I expect the score to get better (as marching band season continues.)

Rose pointed out that while Clarkston trailed Troy Athens and Lake Orion in the second- and third-place spots, respectively, its overall score was only a 10th-of-a-point difference.

Even so, she emphasized that marching band invitationals are not intended as vehicles for winning or losing, but opportunities for schools to do their personal best — and then build on that.

"The first invitational is a time to make sure that we're on the right track — and we are," she said. "The fact that we started out with a 61 tells us we have some room to grow. The recognition for 'best music' tells us we're doing great."

Rose said that the CHS Marching Band is the largest one in Flight I of the Michigan Competing Band Association (MCBA) competitions. This year, 90 students in the CHS squad are first-time marching band members.

The band will play at three more invitationals before the MCBA State Championship at the Pontiac Silverdome Oct. 30:

- Clarkston Invitational — at CHS, Oct. 2
- Plymouth Canton Invitational — at the Plymouth Canton Educational Complex, Oct. 16
- John Glenn Invitational — at Westland John Glenn High School, Oct. 23

Rose said the members of Clarkston's marching band have been practicing their program since mid-August. The band has consistently been a finalist in the MCBA State Championships, has performed at Central Michigan and Western Michigan universities, and has appeared at half-time for the Detroit Lions, she said.

It's also performed twice in London, England, for the Lord Mayor of Westminster's New Year's Celebration and parade.

Chief: Water sources needed to fight fires

STAFF WRITER
sslaughter@oe.homecomm.net

If a home or business catches fire in Springfield Township, Fire Chief Charles Oaks usually knows where to get water to put it out.

He doesn't want to have to rely on his memory or that of his volunteers to save a burning building, but he says he has little choice because the township is not served by city water.

Even with the many lakes in the area, sometimes getting water to a fire scene is a challenge, Oaks said.

He said the problem grows as more homes go up in Springfield. He said the topic of alternative water sources is a "sore subject" with the township board.

"They're not making the developers do it," he said. "My township board says in order to do this we need to get an ordinance."

He said the board wants to know the costs of some of these alternative sources, who would pay for them and who would maintain them.

Supervisor Collin Walls said he is working on gathering information but doesn't expect to have a report together for at least a couple of months.

Springfield relies on water tankers to transport water to fire scenes. If there is a lake or other water source close enough, it can be tapped.

Oaks has suggested dry hydrants and underground water tanks as possibilities. A dry hydrant is a hydrant connected to a stable water source via underground piping. When needed, the hydrant can be tapped and the water extracted.

Even asking developers to consider installing sprinkler systems in larger homes would cut fire risk, he said.

Oaks pointed to Independence Township as an example of a place that takes a proactive approach to fire prevention.

Independence Township Fire Marshal Greg Olrich said fire chiefs in northern Oakland County have only been pushing the fire suppression issue for a couple of years.

"Each community is working on it," he said.

Olrich said most residents don't realize there are no fire hydrants in their area until they go over their homeowners insurance.

He said certificates of occupancy for new construction deal more with making sure there are smoke alarms and that people can escape a burning building.

Independence doesn't have an ordinance requiring developers to put in an alternative water source, but Olrich said the township has made an effort to bring that point into discussions of new developments. For example, if a developer wants a variance of some sort, that gives the township some leverage.

"A lot of times we ask for an alternate water source," he said.

The township uses dry hydrants in some instances. The City of the Village of Clarkston has used dry hydrants that draw on the mill ponds for many years, he said.

He also said the township has had success with building cisterns, but it does add to the cost of a development. A 30,000 gallon tank costs about $30,000, he said.

"Some of the developers have been receptive," he said.

He, too, encourages sprinklers.

One way the township tries to convince developers to have water available is to use standards set up by the National Fire Protection Association. It gives a formula for how much water is needed to put out a fire based on the size of the home or business.

Senate task force report depicts plight of Michigan farms, farmers

BY MIKE MALOTT
HOMETOWN NEWS SERVICE
mmalott@homecomm.net

These are tough times for Michigan farmers.

Prices for agricultural products, when adjusted for inflation, are at the lowest levels since the Depression. Apple prices are at their lowest in 25 years.

"Furthermore, in 1998, the typical commercial hog farmer in Michigan lost close to a quarter million dollars," according to the final report of the Senate Agricultural Preservation Task Force, issued at the launch of the fall legislative session.

Sens. George McManus (R-Traverse City), Dianne Byrum (D-Onodaga), Joanne Emmons (R-Big Rapids), Ken Sikkema (R-Grandville) and Don Koivisto (D-Ironwood), held eight hearings across the state, taking testimony from some 250 residents over the course of the summer to produce the report.

Along with a list of the problems facing Michigan agriculture, the report offers recommendations for assisting farmers.

"The low profitability of farming has led to resources exiting the industry and being used for other purposes," the report concluded in its executive summary. "This includes land. Furthermore, given the current bleak operating environment, it appears that fewer and fewer young people are pursuing a career in production agriculture."

The report received a warm welcome in the senate.

"Government — both state and federal — is in a position to help jump start this critical part of Michigan's economy," Sen. Mike Rogers (R-Brighton), said. "Without the farmers, Michigan families would be at the mercy of importers and import prices for their food. We can't let abundance at the supermarket disguise the crisis that Michigan farmers are facing."

According to McManus, the single biggest obstacle to agriculture is that farmland is assessed for property taxation based on its potential development value. Currently, agricultural land is assessed by its "highest and best use." The result, McManus noted, is that the land on which a cherry orchard is located in his district is assessed for the same amount as nearby land on which a condominium complex sits.

McManus proposes that agricultural land should be assessed on its current use. However, changing that may take an amendment to the Michigan Constitution.

"We must provide," Byrum said as the report was released, "economic incentives to farmers, increase their access to credit, work vigorously to find markets for their projects and require foreign competitors to comply with fair trade practices."

Additional recommendations made by the task force included:

- Maintaining the assessment cap on land when it is transferred from one generation to the next.
- Strengthening the Right to Farm Act.
- Amending the Farmland and Open Space Act to reduce the income threshold from its current 7 percent.
- Exempt farming cooperatives from personal property tax.
- Encourage the Michigan Economic Growth Authority to assist in develop of food processing.
- Create Agricultural Security Zones.
- Create a tax credit for old farmers who rent land to younger farmers.

The list also includes recommendations for federal action, including asking Congress to investigate possible anti-trust actions against certain large companies in the food processing industry.

OU grant helping teachers to use technology

Oakland University is implementing a $1.3 million federal grant to help teachers use technology more effectively in the classrooms.

The three-year grant from the U.S. Department of Education aims to transform the teaching practices of the K-12 teachers in Pontiac and Rochester schools, OU education students and faculty members through optimal use of technology such as Web sites and CD-ROMs.

Participants will integrate more technology in university and K-12 classrooms, and education students will learn how to be technology consultants for practicing educators.

"According to a recent national survey on information technology in teacher education, teacher training programs generally do not provide future teachers with enough modeling of the integration of technology in either university classrooms or practicum experiences in K-12 schools to prepare them to use technology effectively in their own future classrooms," said Anne Porter, director of the grant and associate professor, Instructional Systems Technology, Department of Reading and Language Arts, School of Education and Human Services.

"This Teaching to Learn project provides a long-term solution."

Making informed decisions about the effective use of technology in the classroom requires more than just an understanding of hardware and software, Porter said.

Chamber presents annual awards

BY SALLY SLAUGHTER
STAFF WRITER
sslaughter@oe.homecomm.net

The Clarkston Area Chamber of Commerce handed out kudos at its recent annual meeting.

Clarkston State Bank president David Harrison won the President's Award this year. It was given by outgoing chamber president Wendy Halsey and is the highest honor given by the chamber.

Harrison said he was flattered by the award.

"As one gets recognized in the community one lives in, it can be head turning," he said. "All I'm doing is what everyone should be doing all the time."

Harrison was recognized for his idea to start the Community Connections program. He thought more should be done to help students look at a wider variety of career options. This program, which kicked off Monday with a Business Summit, will bring people from all sorts of jobs into contact with students so they can learn what jobs are out there and what it takes to do the work.

Executive director Penny Shanks said the chamber began 11 years ago with 45 members. It has seen significant growth in the past three years. Shanks said membership in that time jumped from 180 to the current 369.

Also a winner at the chamber annual meeting was Bay Court Park. It received the Beautification Award.

"While much of it seems like the duty of parks and recreation, the community went above and beyond," Shanks said.

The township purchased the property on Andersonville Road between Dixie Highway and White Lake Road with a grant in 1988. A master plan was put together. The first things to go up in the former Boy Scout Camp were the gazebo and pavilion. The playscape took shape in 1994 and the beach was finished in 1996.

"It's nice because it's a beautiful place for the community," said Ann Conklin, Independence Township Parks and Recreation director.

Shanks said Bay Court was a good choice for a Beautification Award because of the amount of work involved in transforming the park.

The chamber also gave out Appreciation Awards to six individuals and businesses while 18 companies shared in the glow of Business Appreciation Awards for donating $1,000 or more to the chamber.

Appreciation Awards are given for outstanding efforts during the past year.

Among those honored was Ron Davis, who chaired the 1999 Golf Classic. Davis, executive director of the North Oakland Headwaters Land Conservancy, is the new chamber president. The golf outing was rejuvenated this year and had the best return ever, Shanks said. The golf outing is the chamber's major fund-raiser and generates one-third of the chamber's operating budget.

GMAC Mortage was recognized for having people at every chamber event.

Beverly Gumtow of Cherry Hill Lanes North was a major force in making the Vegas Night /Dinner dance a success and earned her an award.

A person who gets the job done is Leah Harroun of Oxford Bank and that's what earned her recognition this year.

Lori Heringshausen of Farmer's Insurance - Plautz Agency organized Taste of Clarkston for the first time in 1998 and is at the helm again this year. The inaugural event proved to be a success and Shanks said organization the second time around is much easier.

Finally, Independence Township Clerk Joan McCrary was honored. She serves on all the chamber's major committees. She not only helps with the planning of events and programs, but assists at the actual events.

Businesses given awards were: All Saints Cemetery, Bank One, Cherry Hill Lanes North, the Clarkston Eccentric, Clarkston State Bank, Coast to Coast Telecommunications, GMAC Mortgage, Hubbell Roth & Clark, Independence Township, Michigan Directory Company, Oxford Bank, RE/MAX Today Inc., Republic Bank, Robert E. Kostin P.C., Saturn North, Seaver Title Co., Smith Disposal and T&C Federal Credit Union.

knows how to use those minutes wisely and escape unharmed."

The Great Escape project is a public safety campaign by the non-profit National Fire Prevention Association (NFPA), the same group that promotes Fire Safety Week.

The Springfield Township fire department also is sponsoring a contest. Children in the elementary schools were given graph paper on which to plan, with their parents, a fire escape plan. The fire department will collect these and submit the best one to a NFPA competition. The grand prize is a trip for four to Walt Disney World in Florida.

The Independence Township Fire Department is hoping to visit all Clarkston school district's elementary buildings to talk about fire safety during Fire Prevention Week.

"What we'll do is go over the basics with students in grades kindergarten through third grade," said Fire Marshal Greg Olrich. "This includes talking about planning their escape route in the home; about stop, drop and roll in case an article of clothing on a person catches on fire and about smoke alarms."

Olrich also stressed the importance of smoke detectors.

"I've been in the fire prevention business for 20 years and I've never seen a fatal fire at a home with working smoke detectors. They are the first line of defense for residential structures," he said. "They are what alerts the families."

Both fire departments have fire safety brochures available to help educate the public.

Make a fire escape plan — and practice it

If you don't have a fire escape plan for your home, here are some hints from the National Fire Protection Association for making one.

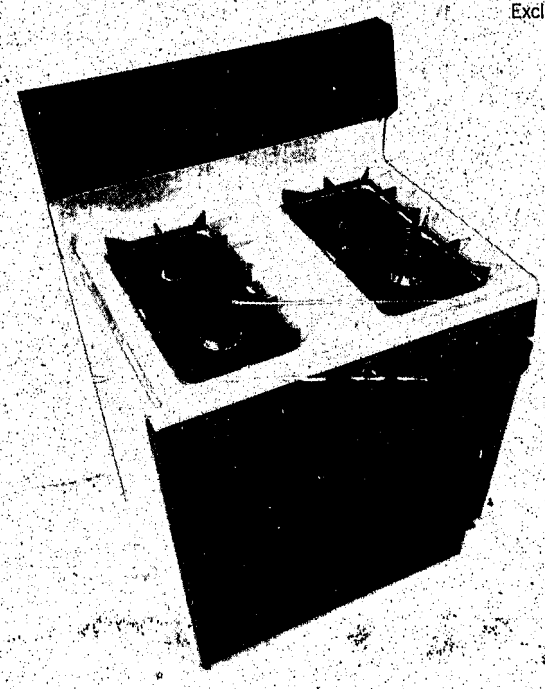

■ Two ways out: Plan for two ways out of every room. One obvious route is the door. Another is from a window that leads to a roof, balcony or porch. If there's nothing to drop to from a window, purchase a sturdy escape ladder tested and listed by an independent laboratory. Keep it near the window for emergencies. Practice using it. Also, make sure windows open easily and are wide enough for people to escape.

■ Family meeting place: Choose a place like a tree, telephone pole or neighbor's home where household members know to meet after escaping from the home.

■ Practice: Practice the home fire escape plan a minimum of two times a year; more often as new people come to live in the home.

■ Smoke alarm: There should be one smoke alarm on every level of the home and in or near each sleeping area. Test smoke alarms monthly and replace batteries regularly.

Mercury levels in metro rainfall called health threat

BY KEN ABRAMCZYK
STAFF WRITER
kabramczyk@oe.homecomm.net

Mercury levels in rain falling from the skies in metro Detroit are 65 times the Environmental Protection Agency's "safe" level, according to a report issued Sept. 14 by the National Wildlife Federation.

The NWF report, "Clean the Rain, Clean the Lakes," said such high levels present serious health implications for humans and wildlife.

The report said the leading sources of mercury are emissions from coal-fired power plants, incinerators and manufacturers of chlorine and caustic soda. It calls on those industries to cut mercury emissions and, eventually, eliminate them altogether.

"What we'd like to see is the coal-fired power plants step up to the plate and reduce their emissions," said Andy Buchsbaum, water quality projects manager for the NWF's Great Lakes regional office in Ann Arbor.

Samples taken in more remote areas of Michigan at South Haven and Sleeping Bear Sand Dunes also far exceeded EPA standards, the NWF said.

■ 'What we'd like to see is the coal-fired power plants step up to the plate and reduce their emissions.'

Andy Buchsbaum
—National Wildlife Federation

The NWF also called on hospitals and other medical facilities to practice "mercury-free medicine" by eliminating mercury from their waste streams and incinerators.

"The impacts are enormous," the report states. "Mercury is a potent neurotoxin in people and in wildlife. It can cause subtle but permanent neurological and brain damage at very low doses; at higher doses, it can cripple and kill."

The state of Michigan issues annual fish consumption advisories because of mercury contamination levels in fish. Mercury concentrates in plankton, then organisms, then the tissue of fish or other wildlife, bioaccumulating with each succeeding species in the food chain.

Larger fish, such as walleye and lake trout, can have mercury concentrations over a million times higher than the surrounding water.

The report also dispels the long-held belief that nature can clean up pollution.

"Rain contamination by mercury completely reverses what we believe to be true about the pollution of our lakes and streams. Before, we assumed that nature had mechanisms to clean up contamination, to dilute pollution. Before, we assumed that rain was nature's way of cleaning our waterways.

"Now we know the opposite is true: Rain itself is so contaminated by mercury that it adds pollution to our lakes and streams."

The NWF has initiated a new effort, the Clean the Rain Campaign. "We're looking for assistance by industry or state government to control or eliminate mercury emissions," Buchsbaum said.

Regional groups joining the NWF in the campaign were Michigan United Conservation Clubs; Clean Water Action, Michigan; Lake Michigan Federation; and the Michigan Environmental Council.

Buchsbaum would like to see mercury levels lowered through more "clean fuels" or solar and wind energy or shift to natural gas. Consumers should conserve energy when they can. "If you use less energy, you will burn less coal," Buchsbaum said.

Energy plants aren't the only ones that emit mercury. Furnaces and boilers also add to emissions, Buchsbaum said.

Detroit Edison spokesman Scott Simons said Edison was working with the EPA and looking at ways to reduce mercury emissions from its coal-firing plants. "While there is some mercury in the emissions, we don't believe it's as high a contributor as they have indicated," Simons said.

"We have reduced our levels by 30 percent in the last several years."

The NWF wants Congress to enact legislation requiring a 95 percent reduction of mercury emissions from all major sources in 10 years.

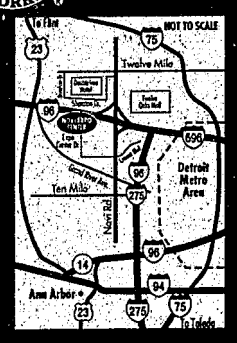

Other NWF recommendations include:

■ On the state level, the six Midwestern Great Lakes states should require all major sources to use state-of-the-art controls on mercury sources. States should set and enforce pollution caps of mercury emissions to protect state waterways under the Clean Water Act. If the states fail to set and enforce the caps, the EPA must take over.

■ State energy commissions should determine the true costs of coal-burning power plants — including their pollution costs — on the industry. Determining the pollution costs will make energy conservation and fuel conversion more cost effective.

■ Customers can conserve energy by purchasing energy-efficient appliances and weatherizing their homes. Avoid purchasing consumer products containing mercury.

Highlighting Fall Fun Daze will be Taste of Clarkston, which is the only part of Fun Daze that costs money. Restaurants donate samples of selected dishes, and customers buy tickets to purchase the food. The food costs $1 to $5. Tickets can be purchased at the event or in advance at the chamber or parks and recreation office. For every $5 in tickets purchased ahead of time, buyers will get $1 free.

The food booths will be in the municipal parking lot near the corner of Main and Washington streets. Washington will be closed from Main to Holcomb so that people can dance in the street to live and recorded music. Children's games also will be set up. Businesses will stay open to 9 p.m. instead of the usual 7 p.m., Shanks said.

A few things were changed from last year.

"We learned a couple of things. We needed more seating for one thing," she said.

Also, the restaurants will be farther apart to give people more room to move. The disc jockey will face Main Street instead of having his or her back to the roadway. That will allow people going by to see and hear better, Shanks said.

The Wolf Pack Running Club is sponsoring a one-mile fun run beginning at 4:30 p.m. Runners for the 5K and 10K races will line up at 5 p.m.

■ 'The slogan is 'we walk because they walk. The idea is people all over the world walk to get food and water. We try to put ourselves in their shoes for just a few hours.'

Karen Zeile
Calvary Evangelical Lutheran Church

Also part of the fun will be a petting zoo, pony rides, arts and crafts and sidewalk sales.

Jill Bice, whose husband, Robert Bice, DDS, set up his practice in Clarkston about 18 months ago is prepared with black and orange toothbrushes, small mirrors and brochures on dental care. She said it is a good opportunity for the office to generate new patients and educate people about their teeth in a fun atmosphere.

"Last year worked out good," she said. "We passed out glow-in-the-dark toothbrushes."

They also handed out tooth-friendly Halloween treats, Shanks added.

After last year's 40-minute sell-out of raspberry pie, Clarkston Cafe General Manager Carol Harris said they are quadrupling the number of pieces they plan to have on hand this year to about 360.

"It was a lot of fun. We had people come into the restaurant over the next few weeks and months who decided to come in and try it out in person," Harris said.

She said the secret to the pie is the fresh — not cooked — raspberries.

Parking for the Fall Fun Daze is at Clarkston Middle School. A shuttle service will run people back and forth, Shanks said.

On Sunday, the street will be full of people for a different reason. The CROP walk begins at 2 p.m. Approximately 40 people are expected to walk as a way to stamp out hunger locally and worldwide, said Karen Zeile of Calvary Evangelical Lutheran Church. The event begins and ends at the church, 6805 Bluegrass.

Walkers receive pledges for their efforts. People can sign up the day of the event by arriving at 1:30 p.m. For information before the event, interested people can call Zeile at the church at 625-3288.

Every church in Independence Township was contacted, but only about six will participate in addition to a few students from the Clarkston High School National Honor Society, Zeile said.

Last year $2,610 was raised in the 1.5- and 6.5- mile walks. Lighthouse Clarkston will received 25 percent of the donations and Church World Services receives the rest to fight hunger worldwide.

Zeile said the CROP Walk is one of the original "walk" fundraisers.

"The slogan is 'we walk because they walk,'" she said. "The idea is people all over the world walk to get food and water. We try to put ourselves in their shoes for just a few hours."

On the edge from page A1

address, things can get complicated. The Reeds' next-door neighbors' address is in the 100 block of Holcomb and they are in the 1000 block of the same street. The giant jump in numbers is because the Reeds are in the first block of Independence Township.

Their home is in the township, but the line between Independence and the City of Clarkston is drawn on a diagonal across their pie-shaped back yard. It is an invisible line, demarcated only on a map in some township — or maybe city — office.

The Reeds have lived in their home for four years. Before that they lived in the township — all the way in the township — for 10 years.

The split lot was not something they knew about right away.

"We never realized," Kathy Reed said. "Then we got two tax bills."

That issue isn't a big one, she said. It's more trouble when it comes to the escrow portion of their mortgage. Taxes are paid through that account.

"Every time (their mortgage) gets sold to someone else I have to call," she said, because the tax portion is incorrect.

One of the biggest recent changes happened because the Clarkston Community Schools adjusted its attendance lines. Not surprisingly, the Reeds were on the border.

"We couldn't figure it out because we were so close," Reed said. "We had to call the board (of education) office and they didn't know so we had to call the transportation department."

Last year the two younger boys attended Clarkston Elementary and now their school is Independence Elementary.

A plus is that the bus stop is in front of their house, Reed said.

Independence Township Assessor David Kramer said Realtors or developers should let people know if their new home might be split between two towns. He didn't have a count on how many parcels are divided, but he said that is a more minor consideration when developers plan subdivisions. He said more pressing issues are generally how the developments will fit in with township ordinances and what will work best with natural features.

Townships, he said, began as geographic entities but as people moved in, more and more political lines began to form. And that complicates things.

For example, where to vote. Kramer said where residents vote and what school district their children attend is determined by which municipality the master bedroom is in.

"There are people who are definitely confused by it," he said.

Reed said another problem is knowing whom to call for various services. If something is stolen from the house, they would call Independence Township but if a larceny occurred down by the mill pond, Clarkston Police would respond, she said.

The family is thinking about building a pool and they have to check into ordinances for both municipalities to see where to place it, she said.

"You never know whom to call," she said.

Independence Township is not unique in having properties that border into other communities, however.

"It happens everywhere," Vandermark said. There are some properties that even cross the boundary line of Oakland and Wayne counties.

"There's a subdivision there that goes into both counties," the manager said.

"It doesn't happen all the time, but it's not unusual," he added.

Vandermark, who used to be the assessor and supervisor for Independence Township in the early 1970s, said he always tried to make an extra effort to give people with properties in two communities a fair deal in their total tax assessment.

"We would make sure (the assessment) was reasonable," he said.

And what happens when a property line splits a home into perfect 50/50 slices?

What community is the majority of the home considered to be in in that case?

Fortunately, there's a rule for that, too.

The general procedure is the majority of the property is wherever the master bedroom is, Vandermark said.

Omissions make budget seem lower

BY PAT MURPHY
STAFF WRITER
pmurphy@oe.homecomm.net

OAKLAND COUNTY COMMISSION

At first glance, the budget adopted by the Oakland County Board of Commissioners last week was the lowest in recent years — $443,706,161 for fiscal 2000, compared with $573,367,175 in the previous year.

But the budget total — anemic compared to previous years — reflected a structural change in county government, rather than any belt-tightening by county officials.

The 2000 budget did not include funds for community mental health, as it had in previous years.

Earlier this year, the county board created an autonomous entity, the Oakland County Community Health Authority, to oversee the delivery of services. The community mental health authority has its own budget, $172 million for fiscal 2000, as adopted last month.

Without money for community mental health, the Oakland County budget for 2000 was about 6 percent higher than fiscal 1999.

Millage unchanged

Even so, the millage rate for county tax payers will not change. It will remain at $4.19 per $1,000 assessed valuation.

"That's one of the lowest in the state," said commissioner Lawrence A. Obrecht (R-Lake Orion), "and I believe tax payers realize it."

The budget was adopted Thursday with little fanfare. Any rancor or differences of opinion were worked out during six weeks of budget hearings. "Those hearings were intense at times," said Obrecht. "But they were relatively smooth compared to previous years."

Commissioner Vincent Gregory (D-Southfield) described the 2000 budget as "balanced good overall for the county.

"The county is going to have to address jail overcrowding in the future, and the possibility of having to build a new jail. That's something we're going to have to deal with, and soon."

Program hits drug dealers' pocketbook

STAFF WRITER
pmurphy@oe.homecomm.net

Tucked away in the $443-million budget adopted by the Oakland County Board of Commissioners is at least one success story.

After returning more than $600,000 to the county's general fund, the Economic Recovery Unit (ERU) was taken off probation and made a permanent part of the Oakland County Prosecutor's office.

"We're very proud of what this unit has accomplished," said assistant Prosecutor James Halushka, director of warrants and investigations. "It hit drug dealers where it hurts most — in the pocketbook.

"For some drug dealers, going to jail is merely a cost of doing business," said Halushka. "But seizing their assets is a decided deterrent. It boosts the cost for drug dealers to do business in Oakland County."

ERU was established on a trial basis last year to help local police agencies go after the financial assets of drug dealers and forfeited bonds.

In its first year, ERU helped recover more than $333,000 in asset and bond forfeitures. Through August, 1999, ERU had recovered more than $1,008,019 — including $600,374 for the county's general fund and $366,587 for local police departments.

"The ERU is a self-funding operation," said county commissioner Lawrence A. Obrecht (R-Lake Orion). "This is the kind of successful operation the board likes to approve," he said.

The budget adopted last week includes $280,000 for salaries and expenses for the four members of ERU — two assistant prosecutors and two investigators. The $280,000 is included in the $15,582,811 approved for the prosecutor's office in fiscal year 2000, which runs from Oct. 1, 1999 through Sept. 30, 2000.

State unemployment rate continues at record low level

Michigan's seasonally adjusted August unemployment rate decreased by two-tenths of a percentage point to a record low of 3.2 percent, Dr. Barbara Bolin, director of the Michigan Department of Career Development, announced.

Michigan's seasonally adjusted July unemployment rate of 3.4 percent was the previous low. The state's August unemployment estimate of 164,000 was the lowest level since at least 1970, while the August employment estimate was 4,906,000.

"Michigan's August labor market data reinforce the fact that our state's economy continues to perform very well," Dr. Bolin said. "Joblessness fell in August with the recall of workers who were laid off in July due to model changeover in the auto industry." The state unemployment rate in the last two months has fallen below the range of 3.7 — 4.0 percent, which prevailed for most of the prior year and one-half.

Labor force declines

Michigan's civilian labor force level decreased by 22,000 in August to total 5,070,000. The reduction in the labor force can be attributed to the withdrawal of summer and seasonal workers and job seekers. Employment declined by 11,000 in Michigan in August, and unemployment decreased by 11,000.

Since January 1999, employment in Michigan has increased by 37,000, and unemployment has decreased by 26,000. From August 1998 to August 1999, employment has increased by 70,000, or 1.4 percent.

For the first time, Michigan's jobless rate fell in August a full one percentage point below the national average. With the August U.S. unemployment rate of 4.2 percent, Michigan's unemployment rate has remained below the national rate for the 50th consecutive month.

State joblessness has declined over the year, as the state rate was six- tenths of a percentage point below the August 1998 rate of 3.8 percent.

According to the monthly survey of employers, seasonally adjusted Michigan payroll jobs decreased by 13,000 in August to total 4,578,000. Job reduction was concentrated in construction (-4,000), manufacturing (-3,000), and government (-3,000).

Since August 1998, payroll jobs have increased by 52,000, or 1.2 percent. The sectors that have recorded significant job growth since August 1998 include construction (+8,000), retail trade (+18,000), and services (+25,000).

Don't assess blame

Find solutions to water problems

■ No one knows for sure whether construction of the new Clarkston High School caused the flooding on Almond Lane or the loss of about half the water in Gulick Lake.

Clarkston Community Schools officials are being accused of needlessly cutting down trees and inadvertently causing backyards to flood and a local lake to dry up.

However, no one knows for sure whether construction of the new Clarkston High School caused the flooding on Almond Lane or the loss of about half the water in Gulick Lake.

And, no one knows for sure whether the trees on Hubbard Road near the new Independence Elementary School would have injured or killed a motorist had they been left standing, as school officials have argued.

Since there may never be definitive answers to these questions, it makes no sense to continue pointing fingers and placing blame.

It also solves nothing for the schools or any other governmental unit to say, "It's not our problem."

If an environmental issue is affecting the quality of life of Independence Township residents, it becomes every officials' problem.

It's time to stop placing blame and start finding a solution.

We applaud the efforts of the officials who have stepped forward to help find a solution to the water level problems. These include Oakland County Commissioner Frank Millard Jr. and Independence Township trustee Neil Wallace, who are trying to organize a meeting with the Michigan Department of Environmental Quality and the Oakland County Drain Commission.

And, we trust that Clarkston school officials will be true to their word when they say they will restore as much of the vegetation as possible around the Independence School site when they landscape the property.

When problems arise, it's not nearly as important to find out who's to blame as it is to find out how to solve them.

Manage, don't fight, growth

■ We're afraid that growth, like old age, is going to come along whether we want it to or not. There are certain things we can do to put it off. We can resolve to live with it more comfortably. We can even enjoy it and use it to our advantage. But growth is going to come. For much of the county, it's already here.

They say they moved out "here" for a reason. Now they fear that reason is disappearing.

The "here" of this saga could be up in Oakland or Orion townships, with their woodlands and wetlands and not a gas station in sight, as well as down in Troy or Southfield with its towers of commerce and traffic jams and fast food joints galore.

So many residents and officials at both ends of busy Oakland County have demonstrated a longtime concern about the urban (or should the word be suburban?) sprawl settling across the land. Just check out any city council or township board meeting when a hot development issue is on the agenda. City, village or township hall is sure to be jammed.

Now we are pleased to note that concern over urban sprawl has advanced to the state level. Folks on all sides of the issue — bureaucrats, business-people, tree-huggers and lawmakers from both sides of the political aisle — came together for a first-ever conference on the topic recently in Traverse City.

And, as was reported in Mike Malott's Sept. 23 Eccentric articles, divergent factions at the conference found something surprising — common ground.

Yes, there's a problem and it's called urban sprawl, most everyone agreed. No, what's good for the developer is not automatically good for suburbia. And, no, we can't pave over and populate every square foot of Michigan from Temperance to Ironwood. So what can be done to make things better?

State lawmakers present said they expect legislation this fall to address the concerns. In fact, they expect the issue will be a priority for the coming season.

One promising concept coming out of the conference involved using financial incentives — not regulation or prohibitions — to direct development back toward the central cities, away from undeveloped areas. Development in so-called "greenfields" would not be banned, or even restricted, but developers building there would have to pay their own way without monetary assistance given by the state.

Ah, the power of the purse strings .... It works when the most strident, finger-wagging legislation will not.

And then there was the idea of local planning agencies for use when SEMCOG is just too large and far-removed and a city's planning commission is too small and self-centered. Perhaps several adjacent townships and cities with similar concerns could get together to do some group-planning in their own interests. A good area to try this approach might be the towns that spin on the axis of busy Rochester Road — Troy, Rochester Hills, Rochester and Oakland Township.

Well, all these ideas and suggestions can be boiled down to one simple edict, we think. Quite simply: Manage, don't fight, growth.

We're afraid that growth, like old age, is going to come along whether we want it to or not. There are certain things we can do to put it off. We can resolve to live with it more comfortably. We can even enjoy it and use it to our advantage.

But growth is going to come. For much of the county, it's already here. This is Oakland County, after all, and if metropolitan Detroit has a future, it is in Oakland County.

If you're going to get the development that inevitably leads to sprawl, then put a hefty price tag on it. Have developers pave the roads adjacent to a proposed shopping mall, and maybe even build the schools that will be needed because of the new subdivisions. Developers need to partner with local governments. Yes, we know it happens now to some extent, but it must happen even more.

If we must have development, let's have it on our terms.

Public schools must compete

Reference: "Voucher plan won't solve problem of failing students," by Al Roberts, superintendent of Clarkston Community Schools district, in the Sept. 16 issue of the Eccentric.

I am saddened that the Clarkston superintendent writes that he doesn't know how to improve education, but doesn't want to take any money away from the public education pork barrel. Most private schools get higher performance at lower costs.

Many facts he uses are erroneous, such as our forefathers established a free public educational system. Nonsense, it was a parochial system for the public. Ever hear of the McGuffy reader? It was loaded with references and reverence to God.

Now, we have a twisted interpretation of education that approves of teaching "evil" as "good" and Christian values as not politically correct. Now you shouldn't have to be a rocket scientist to understand that "garbage" going into students' hearts and minds will be garbage coming out of students' hearts in some sort of reprobate behavior such as the Columbine massacre, where the killer talked for several weeks in school, before the killings, about doing them. (Where were the guardians of the public educational systems' corrective actions?)

The current public education system is too cowardly to take pro-active corrections to eliminate the unGodly evil that has become too acceptable and "politically correct." Theodore Roosevelt said, "To educate a man in mind and not in morals is to educate a menace to society."

The current public education system must start competing in the marketplace of performance and get rid of the humanism "religion" it's proselytizing to students, or become extinct as the dinosaur.

Article 'humbling'

The article you published about me was a flattering expose. I was grateful for the kind words and the enjoyable pictures you featured. It's been a humbling experience since my fellow schoolmates are reading about me. If there is anything that I appreciate the most, it is the message about breast cancer awareness. October is the month, you know. And best of all, I am truly grateful for this memorabilia.

Thank you for the lovely article about the Davisburg Piecemakers. We were all impressed with the coverage and photographs. It was obvious that reporter Susan Tauber shares our joy of creative stitching by the upbeat and informative nature of her article.

Part-time workers often best

I wanted to share a very useful tip related to a help-wanted ad I recently placed in the Observer & Eccentric newspapers.

I'm the president of F&A Communications, a Waterford-based public relations firm. We are a growing firm, and I needed to hire a new executive assistant. I wanted an energetic, well-organized employee looking for part-time work.

When developing the ad, I thought about what would make the ad really hit home for the type of employee I was looking for. I included two very important points: "Can accommodate school hours. Moms welcome."

Wow! I had an overwhelming response. Honoring the flexible needs of mothers who want to work part time really opened up the flood gates. It was an easy decision to be accommodating, considering my husband and I have seven children of our own. I know how demanding a parent's schedule can be. And I also realize how important employees are to a company's success. They are the cornerstone of any business. A company's ability to grow and be recognized as a leader is entirely dependent on the quality of its employees. I didn't want the best available person walking away because they didn't think the job could fit into their hectic schedule.

I had more than 30 responses over a period of several days and was able to hire an outstanding executive assistant, who has three young children. I was amazed at the quality of responses I received. Many of the prospects were highly qualified. I was able to refer several of them to Metro Trading Association and Meade Lexus, two of our clients who were also looking for top-quality employees on a part-time basis. I reminded them both that if they are willing to be flexible and accommodating, they will find themselves in a position to hire an outstanding employee. Both of them did.

POINTS OF VIEW

'It's just alcohol' attitude is killing kids — literally

AL ROBERTS

Last week, the Clarkston Task Force brought Milton Creagh to Clarkston. A nationally acclaimed speaker, who addresses substance abuse, Creagh spoke to our seventh and eighth graders, to our high school students and to the parents who attended the special evening session. We were told the speaker's message would be hard-hitting and direct so we took precautions with our youngsters.

■ Letters were sent to the parents of all middle and high school students, giving them the option of excluding their child from the session.

■ Our counselors and other support personnel were readied to provide assistance for any youngsters who might be disturbed by the speaker's message.

■ Parents were given an opportunity to view Creagh's video prior to Thursday's program.

Given the potential for controversy, the additional work that would need to be added to an already "full plate," and the possibility of bad press, why didn't we just say no? Because, as Creagh tells his audiences, we are losing the war against drugs and alcohol!

Despite massive efforts to educate our children about the problems associated with substance abuse, too many Clarkston kids continue to use alcohol and other drugs. While our prevention programs are extensive, weekend and after-school abuse continues to be a problem for many of our teenagers. The youngsters will tell you, it isn't a lack of education that causes them to use alcohol, tobacco or drugs. So, what is it? I too was hoping to gain additional insight from our guest.

Creagh shared a number of viewpoints with those in attendance. From my perspective the following thoughts were the most noteworthy:

■ Substance abuse is a family problem and a community problem.

■ Economics and adult abuse are major factors in keeping illegal substances "on the street."

■ Adults must model the behaviors we want our children to display. If you smoke or use alcohol/drugs in front of your children, don't expect them to do differently.

■ Today's teens need parameters, just as we did when we were children.

■ Teenagers, even those closest to their family, are teenagers. They frequently test us, and it is our responsibility to guide and direct them. Rules are not always to their liking, but proper discipline is in their best interest.

■ Risk increases with the amount of unsupervised time.

■ Too many parents don't realize how important it is to know their child's friends, and their friends' parents.

■ All too often, we do not allow others to help us keep our children on the right track. When a neighbor, a teacher, or a friend, address a concern, there is a tendency to say, "not my child," or "stay out of my business."

■ Educating youngsters has not been a successful strategy in eliminating substance abuse among students.

I hope all of us who witnessed Creagh's presentation were upset. As a community we need to be upset enough to do something about it! It is time to stop the damage. It is time to set a higher standard. The, "it's just alcohol" attitude among our adult population is figuratively and literally killing our kids!

Was the event worth any possible controversy? Ask the youngsters who told me they "made their parents come back with them for the presentation," or the parents who told me they "had no clue!" The most important lesson I learned is that this monster cannot be slain with one silver bullet — education. If we are to solve this national dilemma, I learned we must look in our own Clarkston mirror.

State representative has valid points on home rule

MIKE MALOTT

Municipal officials are none too happy these days with State Rep. Bob Gosselin (R-Troy) for his proposal to limit local ordinance making powers.

He's the sponsor of House Bill 4777, which would block local units of government from setting policy in some areas already addressed by state government.

Local officials have come to call it the "Destruction of Local Government Bill." They say that in limiting the authority of cities to make their own rules, the bill would violate "home rule."

When Gosselin first drafted his proposal earlier this year, it was extremely broad. The way I read it then, it would have simply barred any local unit from adopting ordinances in areas of policy already addressed by the state government. Obviously, that's not workable.

Now even Gosselin admits that it needs to be narrowed. And while he has it down already to about 12 areas of law which he'd rather that cities and townships not duplicate, the bill is still collecting harsh criticism.

Despite the rhetoric, I wonder whether local officials have considered one aspect of this issue — do they really want to be addressing some topics, topics like minimum wages, at the local level?

It was Detroit's "living wage ordinance" that got the entire thing started. Detroit adopted the ordinance to require that companies that do more than $50,000 worth of business with the city, or get that much in tax breaks, must pay at a rate 125 percent of the federal poverty line. It works out to $8.23 per hour if they provide benefits, $10.29 per hour if they don't. Compare that to the $5.15 per hour minimum wage.

Gosselin argues that it's unfair to businesses. But I wonder if it will turn out to be fair to the municipal officials themselves.

Make no mistake about, the living wage issue is not limited to Detroit. It's a national movement. So far at least 26 cities and counties across the country have adopted these ordinances, from Boston and Baltimore to San Jose. If it hasn't come yet to a community near you, there is no reason why it couldn't.

Imagine what could happen a few years down the road. Minimum wages or "living wages" could become standard planks in the platforms of those running for city offices. It is not as if local officials don't already have enough to do, regulating development, planning the community and operating local services. Now add to the agenda an annual review of the Consumer Price Index and the local cost of living in order to set the local "living wage."

There will be a segment of voters for whom this is the most important, perhaps the only, issue. I can well imagine a heated city council race, especially if the "living wage" issue is at the center of it, that becomes a virtual bidding war for constituents' votes.

Locals say they want home rule now, but I wonder if that will change after the first attempted recall because some city council didn't adopt a "living wage" quite high enough to satisfy some group of residents.

Not all cities that adopt such rules limit it to those companies that do business with the government. Can you imagine the reaction of businesses if different cities had different minimum wage rates within in the state? Moving to save on labor costs — once limited to factories that could afford to go to Indochina, or Mexico, or at least Missouri — could become standard practice for party stores, dry cleaners and gas stations.

To see what kind of havoc differential minimum wage rates could cause, one need look back only as far as the tax abatement issue of the 1970s and '80s. At first, the idea of giving a 50 percent break on property taxes for 12 years sounded like a good way to attract new businesses and compete with other states. Then, smart business people began to shop for the best deals communities would offer. Eventually, Michigan communities ended up competing against each other to get those factories.

It seems to me there are some areas of law where the state and local governments ought not overlap. And it would seem to be in the best interests of local officials as well to have that discussion.

Privilege and responsibility make DMC comeback likely

PHILIP POWER

You'd never mistake Lloyd Semple for Joe Six-Pack. Fully erect at 6-feet-3 inches, with a full pompadour of gray-white hair, flashing eyes and a boomingly cultivated voice, Semple embodies all you'd expect of a man with Yale undergraduate and Michigan Law School degrees.

He lives in Grosse Pointe. He hunts ducks on Walpole Island and plays golf at the Country Club of Detroit. He has an educated palate for French wine and a magnificent cellar. A fine lawyer, he's chairman of Dykema Gossett PLLC, Michigan's largest law firm.

And, as volunteer and unpaid chairman of the board of the Detroit Medical Center, he's been leading the struggle to keep one of Michigan's largest and most troubled medical centers from going under.

Semple is only one of a number of Michigan's natural aristocrats, men and women who in addition to their own distinguished careers take on crushing volunteer burdens to make things better for all of us. Allan Schwartz, the lawyer-civic leader-philanthropist, is an example. So is former governor William Millliken.

I wanted to write about Semple just now partly because DMC has been in the news so much in recent months and partly because the inside story of what he has accomplished — quietly, with no thought of publicity and no personal gain — has never adequately been told.

Semple first got involved as a volunteer on Harper Hospital's board some 25 years ago. After Harper became part of DMC, Semple went on the parent's board. He became chairman on Jan. 1, 1998.

Shortly thereafter, DMC announced a loss of more than $100 million for the fiscal year. "Significant financial distress," says Semple, "the unintended consequence of federal legislation that cut Medicare and Medicaid payments to hospitals and slashed reimbursements for expenses of training young doctors at teaching hospitals like DMC."

Semple knew he had a hard row to hoe. He brought in the Hunter Group, a nationally-noted consulting firm that compared its extensive database of hospital costs to the numbers at DMC and recommended drastic cuts. Eventually, 2,500 staff were laid off; unions and staff alike complained. Sinai Hospital, once the state's only Jewish hospital, was consolidated with Grace to save $30 million in operating expenses; many of Sinai's old supporters were angered.

Semple started working 80-hour weeks — 40 hours for DMC and 40 hours for Dykema Gossett — rising at 5 a.m. and not getting to bed before 10 p.m. Weeks passed without seeing his wife at home for dinner or, for that matter, breakfast.

Semple recalls: "The worst time was last winter and spring as we bounced from crisis to crisis. I remember one meeting with a bunch of dedicated but very frustrated doctors who yelled at me for fully three hours. It was without a doubt the most difficult meeting I've ever had."

Eventually, Semple and the board appointed a new CEO, Dr. Arthur Porter, and a new management team. Things have gradually started to get better. DMC isn't out of the woods yet, but it's a whole lot better off than it was, thanks to many dedicated people including Lloyd Semple.

Why do it? Why go through the aggravation, especially when somebody like Semple doesn't need it. "The fundamental reason is the teachings and tradition of my family," Semple explained. "With privilege comes responsibility. My father, Robert Semple, was CEO of Wyandotte Chemical, but he also served the community by being president of the Detroit Symphony for years and head of the United Fund for this region. In our family, that's just what we do."

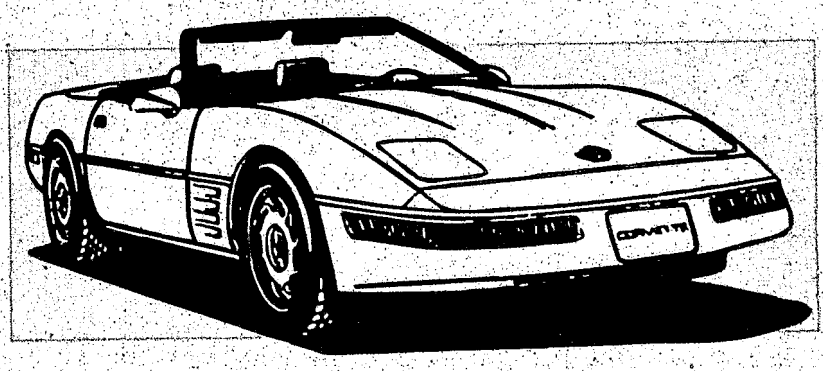

With privilege comes responsibility. That isn't everybody's cup of tea, but for natural aristocrats like Lloyd Semple it is. And we're all the better for it.

Memories hard to leave behind

"We live happily forever, so the story goes."
— from the song "Come Sail Away" by Styx

Last week, my husband had one last task to complete that would finalize our move from our old house. The task involved disposing of an old, somewhat dilapidated vehicle that could no longer be driven.

He took off from his job so he could be there when the Purple Heart organization came to pick it up. After the three years that it took us to move from that house (is that some kind of a record?), we were fairly "chomping at the bit" — as they say — to get that car gone. To rid ourselves of the albatross. To be, in short, at long last completely moved.

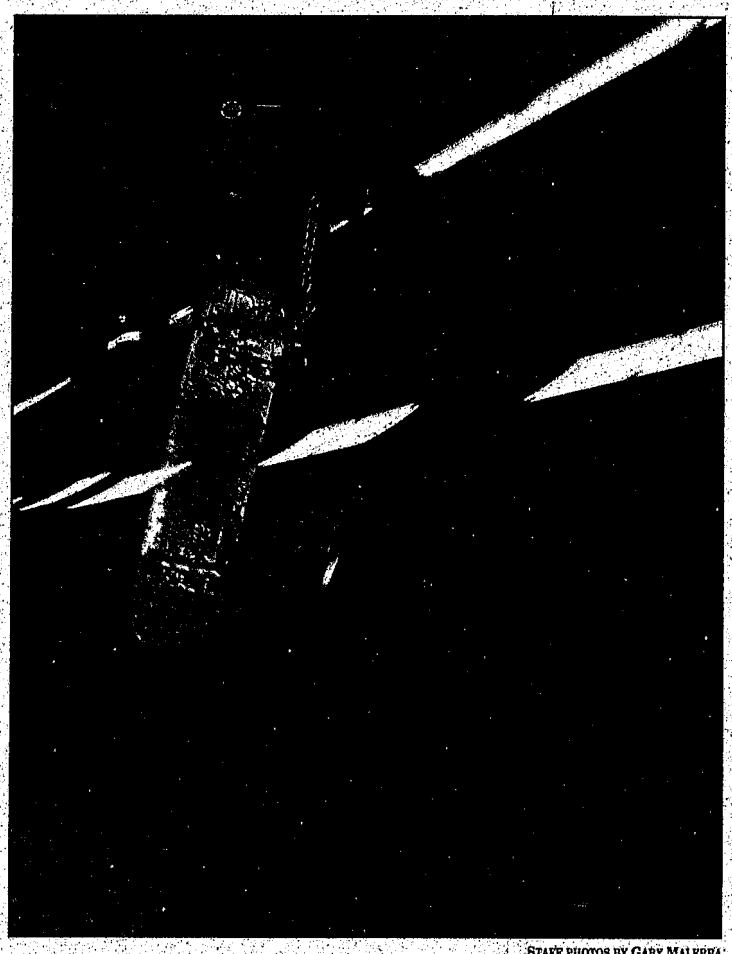

Imagine my surprise, then, when I swung by the house to see if the tow-truck had yet arrived. To see if my husband had returned to work. To see the new owners moving their belongings into our old territory. Into what had been our home.

To find myself tearing up at the notion.

As it happened, just as I pulled onto the cul-de-sac that was our base for nearly 20 years, the above-referenced Styx song came on the radio. And while it is a song about sailing away to a virgin sea — and more sublimi-

Teenage boys don't always have a lot to say. What they seem to prefer is action — speed, height, daring.

Ask the "Team Wipeout" teens sponsored by Waterford Township's Wipeout Styles about their favorite sport — skateboarding — and they'll tell you quite simply that it's "way cool" or that they "like it a lot."

Ask them to put their words into motion, though, and they fly into the kind of stuff that makes a mother or father go gray. With nothing between their airborne bodies and the hard floor except a thin skateboard, they leap stacks of chairs, descend stairs or glide along handrails, doing elaborate turns.

"You can always get better at it," says the most wordy of them, Chris Crotty. Crotty is a 16-year-old Rochester teen who will be participating Oct. 9 in a skateboarding competition at the Clarkston Christian Association (CCA) in Independence Township. The competition, which is open to public participants, is being sponsored by Wipeout Styles and Pogo Skate Shop of Birmingham. Each shop will have a team in the event, which begins at 2 p.m.

White Lake Township's Paul Conrady and Waterford Township's Patrick Phillips,14, agree.

"I like blunt tricks," says Phillips, who attends Waterford Mott High School.

"It's fun to progress. And it's something to do to keep me out of trouble," adds Conrady, 18. Conrady says his favorite stunts include a 180-degree flip of the board.

Lack of community playgrounds prompts schools to open gates

BY SUSAN B. TAUBER

CLARKSTON

It's a natural partnership — school playgrounds and people.

The townships of Independence and Springfield and the Clarkston Community Schools District are working together to turn school playgrounds into community parks.

The idea started with Ann Conklin, director of Independence Township Parks and Recreation Department.

"About three years ago, my department's advisory committee was reviewing the township's master plan," she explained. "We realized the township is deficient in playground equipment. We got the idea of meeting with the schools to see if they would buy into the plan that school playgrounds can also be community playgrounds."

The school district bought into the concept and so did the townships that house Clarkston Community Schools buildings. Representatives have been meeting to plan the School Parks Cooperative Venture, something they hope to expand to include financial and/or manpower partnerships with school PTA/PTO groups and to community organizations.

Dave Reschke, assistant superintendent for elementary and middle school operations, informed the school district's board recently about what the project would achieve. The list includes:

- Building community assets
- Improving facilities and understanding among generations
- Creating safer schools with less vandalism and positive alternatives
- Strengthening a sense of community
- Providing a productive use of time

The individuals working on the project have established minimum standards for the playgrounds. They would include security lighting, picnic tables, pay phone, fitness/health stations, outdoor basketball and other things normally found in parks and school playgrounds.

The committee is working on how and when to implement the school parks venture. Reschke said current plans are for community playgrounds to be established at Clarkston, North Sashabaw, Independence and Springfield Plains elementary schools and at Clarkston Middle School for the summer of 2000.

"That is an optimistic plan," Reschke said.

"We are more than happy to cooperate with the school system," said Jennifer Tucker, head of Springfield Township Parks and Recreation Department. "Our clientele are the adults and the children — the same children who go to the schools."

Conklin said the plan was delayed because of school building renovations and construction. "But little things happened during construction that will benefit this plan," she said.

At one school, for instance, prior discussions led to a change in the location of a bathroom door.

"The contractor was able to move a door to the outside so people will be able use the bathroom facilities without having access to the school building. That's exactly the kind of thing we are looking for," Conklin said.

"Once we finish working out all the issues, such as liability, we will have a long, comprehensive plan that will take us awhile to achieve. The key word is collaboration and partnerships," she added.

"These school parks will be a point of pride on our community," Reschke said.

Fourteen-year-old Waterford Kettering High School freshman Josh Lucas says — despite the fact that he's sick on the day he gets his photograph taken: "I love it. It's my favorite thing to do."

According to Mike Jacques, owner of Wipeout Styles, the boys will do their tricks on what is called a half-pipe at the CCA. The half-pipe is a wooden ramp with upward turns at its ends. Skateboarding involves building momentum on the ramp and then turning the body and board into various positions. Tricks can also be done outside on parking lot and landscaping structures, a favorite location among the teens.

At the CCA, skateboarders skate inside and are required to wear safety equipment including helmets, Jacques says, adding, "Difficulty is the key element and, of course, landing the trick.

"Most of these kids are self-taught. They just kind of start out in the driveway and they do different things."

According to Jacques, the competition is being held to promote the two stores and the sport of skateboarding which, at least locally, doesn't yet feature any girls.

"We decided there's a lot of great skaters around here and it gives back to them as well," Jacques says, adding that the five young men who compete for Wipeout Styles were handpicked because of their ability.

"This is amazing," he says. "These kids are so phenomenal. With roller blades the skates are stuck (on the feet) but with these kids, they have to keep the skateboard under their feet and do tricks and 360s (360-degree turns). They're just as athletic as football and basketball players.

"It's all good-natured competition. It's fun to watch them. They really get excited." The competition winners will receive gift certificates to Wipeout Styles, skateboarding decks and bearings as prizes.

The Clarkston Christian Association is at the corner of Sashabaw and Maybee roads in Independence Township. Riders who are not members of the Wipeout or Pogo teams can compete by pre-registering at the CCA.

Todd McNulty is also a member of Team Wipeout, but he could not be reached for comment on this story.

Elks Lodge to remain open for business

BY MARY J. MOILANEN
STAFF WRITER
mmoilanen@oe.homecomm.net

Members of Rochester Elks Lodge No. 2225 want one thing to be perfectly clear: contrary to rumor, the club and lodge are here to stay.

Word of the club's supposed demise began to circulate after the restaurant and banquet facilities were forced to temporarily close after two successive power outages in July destroyed the food supply.

"When you lose all your larder, fill it, and lose it again, you lose a lot of money," said Al Lamphere, chairman of the Elks' board of directors.

The Elks, a service and social organization with some 1,100 members in Rochester, also had to deal with sewer problems and a roof in need of repair.

For Tony Borraccio, who came aboard as club manager in February, it was a hectic time. Receptions and other events were already scheduled, and the show had to go on.

"We got through it, we got everything done," said Borraccio, whose family owns Lino's restaurant in Rochester Hills.

But once those events were completed, Elks members and the board of directors had serious discussions about how to proceed. In the end, Lamphere said, the Elks membership and board supported saving the facility.

"They all seemed to want to keep it all in operation," he said. "We decided to go out and borrow some money to get us back in business."

With a loan secured through North Oakland Community Bank in Rochester Hills, sewer and roof repairs have started and Borraccio said the lodge will be taking banquet reservations for parties and other gatherings beginning Oct. 1.

"Right now we want to get the banquet hall going again," Borraccio said.

As for the restaurant portion, his goal is to open to the public for lunch Monday through Friday, as well as for dinner on Friday, by Oct. 22. Entertainment will be offered as well.

Bingo has been ongoing and will continue on Wednesday evenings. As of Oct. 1, food service for Bingo nights will resume.

Also, to guard against future power outages, the lodge will purchase a generator to run the coolers.

"We won't lose $4,000 in food supplies again," he said.

The facility was definitely worth saving, according to Borraccio. More than just a hall with a few card tables and chairs, the Elks lodge is a true banquet facility, newly renovated and redecorated last year. The Elks also invested $60,000 in its kitchen and the parking lot is expected to be repaved this spring.

"Before all this happened, we were busy in the restaurant, busy in the banquet hall," Borraccio said. "We want people to know that we're back on track."

The carpeted rooms can accommodate groups of 25 to 300. Burgundy and other soft colors dominate the decor, and banquets include linen napkins and table clothes and new padded chairs.

Outside, a gazebo accents the tree-lined yard, and Borraccio had Christmas lights strung in the trees to add atmosphere.

"We've got one of the prettiest spots in the city of Rochester," Lamphere said.

Like many upscale facilities, ice carvings and a choice of present buffet, family-style and sit down dinners are offered. The Elks work consistently with Holland's Floral and Gifts, as well as European Accent bakery and Home Bakery, all located in the Rochester area.

Borraccio wants people to know that the lodge can offer a quality experience, whether it's for showers, wedding events, business meetings, funerals or parties.

"I want to be able to compete with places like Addison Oaks and River Crest," said Borraccio. "My basic goal is good food, plenty of it served by staff with smiling faces."

For more information, please contact Tony Borraccio at (248) 651-4840. The lodge is located at 600 E. University in Rochester.

nally about loss and hope and new life — I found myself stopped cold by the lyrics as I hummed along to its familiar tune:

"We live happily forever, so the story goes."

Suddenly, much of what our family had experienced there together — two decades of life — came rushing to me on a flood of emotion: The party we threw for our neighbors at New Year's. The planting of flowers. The trick-or-treating. All the Easter Egg hunts. The week we lost power in early January and had to keep the house warmed with our fireplace and our wits. The series of house cats and pet dogs. The birthday parties and holiday dinners. The decorating misadventures. The piano lessons. The cooking disasters. The accidental flooding of the basement. The purchasing of our first new furniture. The teaching of bicycle riding. The walks to the local elementary. The death of my husband's mother. The birth of our son. Watching him, and his much-delayed disabled sister, take their first steps. Indeed, the raising of our cherished children.

Suddenly, despite the fact that it was much too late, I didn't want to let go. I stopped the car in front of the house — a mere symbol — and removed my glasses, wiped my tears and depressed the gas pedal with a heavy sigh ... and without looking back.

Until now.

I remember vividly the night we moved into that house. How we had longed for it for years beforehand. How we wanted desperately to move from our tiny starter home in Pontiac and into this new welcoming building near Clarkston.

We saved our money. We selected the lot for it. Chose its style. Picked out the brick and carpeting and cupboard colors. Watched for seemingly endless months while it went up board by board.

I remember that we used to come and just linger in the yard, buildingless, and tease about how we should pitch a tent to live in while we waited. I remember sitting in the only stuffed chair we owned, alone in the family room, and throwing up my arms in sheer rapture on the first morning of our occupation.

Home!

We moved into that house on Dec. 22, 1977. Our daughters were 4 years and 6 months of age at the time. Our son wasn't even an idea.

"We have to be in before Christmas," I told my husband, begging, then fantasizing about how we would finally have a fireplace before which to celebrate the holiday. A place to hang the children's stockings.

My husband was a good sport. We moved our belongings — including our fully-decorated Christmas tree, tinsel and all — by ourselves in a U-haul, during a very deep blizzard.

It took us all day and most of the night to make that move in.

All these years later we move happily on, into forever, as the story goes. But we move on with a tear of appreciation, dedicated to yesterday, as well.

May the house on the cul-de-sac offer a future of happiness to the next family, too.

FOOTBALL FORECAST

JIM TOTH

Key games top make-or-break football week

Get ready high school football buffs because the most exciting week of the high school football season – o.k., o.k next to the final weekend (maybe) – is here.

Week 6 is the make-it or break-it one for many teams holding postseason hopes, along with the one featuring such grudge battles as Troy-Clarkston and Walled Lake Western-Farmington Harrison.

Both matchups promise to live up to their billing with strong support coming from the other 19 Eccentric-area contests that highlight this all-important slate of football.

Clarkston at Troy (7 p.m. Friday): Oakland County's premier matchup pits the OAA's premier teams. The Colts have won the last two get-togethers by a point each time. It very well could be three-for-three.

PICK: TROY

Birmingham Seaholm at Lake Orion (7 p.m. Friday): Too much firepower from the Dragons has the Maples reeling.

PICK: LAKE ORION

Oxford at Fenton (7:30 p.m. Friday): The Wildcats tame these Tigers into submission.

PICK: OXFORD

Cranbrook at Grosse Pointe Liggett (7 p.m. Friday): Coming off their highest offensive output of the season, the Cranes see their task get tougher with a trip to Grosse Pointe Woods. The unbeaten Knights remain that way in a nail-biter.

PICK: LIGGETT

Bloomfield Hills Andover at Ferndale (7 p.m. Friday): The Eagles have to be licking their chops thinking if they're ever going to win a game this season, it will come here against the Barons. Not so.

PICK: ANDOVER

Pontiac Central at Southfield-Lathrup (7 p.m. Friday): If Omari Colen was able to run wild last week, he surely will find open terrain against the Chiefs.

PICK: LATHRUP

Royal Oak Kimball at Rochester Adams (7 p.m. Friday): The Highlanders have fallen on some hard times the last two weeks, so a visit by the Knights is a welcomed sight.

PICK: ADAMS

Rochester at Hazel Park (7 p.m. Friday): Look for the Falcons to take out some of their last-second frustrations on the struggling Vikings.

PICK: ROCHESTER

Waterford Kettering at Bloomfield Hills Lahser (7 p.m. Friday): Points have been hard to come by all season for the Knights. It won't get an easier, despite a visit by the Captains.

PICK: KETTERING

Ortonville-Brandon at Birmingham Groves (7 p.m. Friday): The Falcons have been overpowering all season, and nothing the Blackhawks do will change that.

PICK: GROVES

Troy Athens at West Bloomfield (7 p.m. Friday): If quarterback Mark Abro has any kind of day like he did last week against Adams, the Lakers will yield more points (39) than they did a week ago.

PICK: ATHENS

Auburn Hills Avondale at Madison Heights Lamphere (7 p.m. Friday): I know I shouldn't do this, but the Yellow Jackets are playing too well to sway the Rams' way.

PICK: AVONDALE

Farmington Harrison at Walled Lake Western (7:30 p.m. Friday): The Warriors take advantage of the opportunity of keeping the Hawks out of the playoffs for the first time since 1992.

PICK: WL WESTERN

Walled Lake Central at Farmington (7:30 p.m. Friday): The Vikings secured their first win a week ago, so now it's back to their normal ways.

Wolves' senior fires 70 to capture county golf meet

BY MIKE SCOTT
SPECIAL WRITER

It may have been inspiration from watching the Ryder Cup over the weekend.

More likely it was because the streaky Clarkston golf team played to its potential.

Whatever the reason, the Wolves shocked area teams by placing third in the Oakland County meet Monday at Pontiac Country Club but the real story was Mark Churay. The senior captain had a stellar round, firing a 2-under-par 70 to capture medalist honors.

The performance by the Wolves gives them a boost of confidence heading into the OAA meet and regional play over the next two weeks.

As a team Clarkston finished with a team score of 308, four shots behind first place Walled Lake Central and two back of Rochester Adams. Dave Benner fired a three-over-par 75 to back Churay. The rounds of Jeff Walters (81) and freshman Dustin McMillan (82) also counted toward the final score.

The result exceeded the expectations of head coach Tim Kaul who was hoping for a top seven finish heading into the event.

"This was a tremendous performance and I couldn't be more proud of (Churay) for how he came back after struggling," said Kaul.

Churay hit his irons and straight and putted consistently well. He birdied his first two holes and maintained the momentum through 18 holes that can be a difficult chore, particularly in a tournament setting.

Following the round, Churay was understandably pleased with his round. He is no stranger to sub-par rounds, having posted a 69 at a tourna-

Cagers can't turn Paige in loss to Falcons

Rochester's Harris explodes in 3rd as Wolves drop 3rd straight game

BY BRAD KADRICH
SPORTS EDITOR

■ 'If your don't take care of the ball, you're not going to win games.'

Ann Lowney
—Clarkston basketball coach

The Clarkston Wolves and Rochester Falcons each went into Tuesday's Oakland Activities Association Division I basketball tussle on two-game losing streaks, so something had to give.

In the second half Tuesday night, it was the Wolves' offense that gave.

Clarkston committed 10 turnovers in the decisive third quarter alone, and Falcons senior Paige Harris converted many of them into points as the Falcons exploded after halftime for a 51-38 win over Clarkston at Rochester High School.

The second-half performance by the Wolves spoiled a nearly-perfect first half, during which the Wolves held Harris and junior forward Sarah Potts to seven points combined (two baskets by Potts and a 3-pointer from Harris) and limited the Falcons to 7-of-30 shooting from the floor.

"That first half was beautiful," Clarkston coach Ann Lowney said. "But turnovers killed us (in the second half). If you do not take care of the basketball, you are not going to win.

"I thought our defense was great (in the first half) and our half-court offense was fabulous. But these girls need to learn to do it for 32 minutes."

The third quarter was the difference. After getting just three points in the first 16 minutes, Harris drained a 3-pointer with 5:35 left in the third quarter that pulled the Falcons even at 23-23. After Clarkston's Rachel Uchman's baseline jumper gave Clarkston a brief lead, Harris drove the baseline for consecutive baskets to give Rochester its first lead since 3-1 early in the first quarter.

Uchman and junior Tovah Bazely each hit a free throw, but Harris two steals and six points in the final three minutes of the quarter to give the Falcons a 35-27 lead they never relinquished. Harris scored 13 in the period and finished with 16 for the game.

Clarkston employed a 1-2-2 zone focused on stopping Harris and Potts, who finished with 12 points, and it worked like a charm in the first half. But in the second half, particularly in the third quarter, the Wolves simply turned the ball over too many times.

"They say you work on defense and rest on offense," Lowney said. "We didn't play offense enough to get any rest. (Harris) got off in the third quarter, but when you give a player like that that many opportunities, you're going to get hurt."

The closest the Wolves got in the fourth quarter was five points, 41-36, on a layup by junior forward Sarah Morgan, a free throw from Uchman and a 15-foot jumper by senior guard Candace Morgan. But the Falcons went on an 8-0 run, including two layups from Potts, to close out the game.

In the first half "we took care of the ball and we didn't give them easy buckets," Lowney said. "But we had too many turnovers. If you're playing defense that much, you're in trouble."

Clarkston led 13-5 after the first quarter, during which the Falcons were just 2-of-17 from the floor. Junior Jessica Boyk gave the Falcons a 3-1 lead with a 3-pointer at the 6:35 mark, but Uchman came right back with a layup, sparking a 12-2 run to finish out the period. Uchman, who finished with

Netters try to capitalize on success as teams converge to crown champ

BY MIKE SCOTT
SPECIAL WRITER

Following a 9-3 dual match season, Clarkston will attempt to capture the OAA II championship today in the league meet at Troy Athens.

The Wolves will be one of the favorites to win the event along with Berkley and the host Red Hawks based on regular season performances. A number of Clarkston players are seeded among the top two individuals or teams in their respective flights.

Allison Olinger finished the regular season undefeated at #3 singles and is seeded first in her flight. The Wolves are also seeded first in the bottom two doubles flights and the #2 doubles team of Jenny and Carrie Linenger will enter the competition rated second.

Head coach Beth Manojlovich is confident her team will make a run for the championship after splitting with Berkley and Athens in the regular season and dominating the remaining opponents in Division II.

"I think any one of the three teams could come out on top and the seedings are distributed evenly among them," she said. "Any of our girls could advance to the finals and win it if they are playing at the top of their game."

To win the individual title, a player(s) must win either two or three matches, based on their rankings in each flight. The rankings are determined by regular season results. The team division competition is based 50 percent on dual meet results and 50 percent on the one-day tournament.

One thing that is certain is Clarkston has played two of the best squads in Oakland County recently in tune-up matches that could help them today. After falling to Bloomfield Hills Lahser last week, the Wolves dropped their third match of the season Monday to Birmingham Groves, 7-1. The #4 doubles team of Lindsey McCleary and Kalin Thomas was the lone victor for the Wolves, as they prevailed in a hard-fought, three-set match.

Manojlovich was pleased with her squad's performance against Groves, and felt Clarkston competed better than they did against the Knights the previous week. Some of the losses came in three sets and she said her team was better prepared for the talent they saw on the other side of the court.

"Groves had some really tremendous singles players," said Manojlovich. "They were certainly one of the best teams we had played this year."

One of the main differences was that the Wolves made less unforced errors, making Groves players hit winners to gain the point. There were fewer tactical errors as well, such as hitting the ball into an area of the court where the opponent could hit an easy winner.

"We just tried to win as many points as we could and I was much happier with this result than I was with Lahser," Manojlovich added. "They weren't as intimidated."

On Tuesday Clarkston switched their lineup and started some players who haven't had much varsity experience in a 7-1 victory over Southfield-Lathrup.

Michelle Dodge moved up to singles for the event and won handily and the little used doubles team of Kiley Banicky and Laura Willison also was victorious.

Manojlovoch is happy with the schedule that had Clarkston playing its two toughest opponents late in the year in preparation for the league meet and regionals.

There isn't much of a difference between dual matches and tournament play according to the Clarkston coach who feels conditioning is a key to succeeding in the postseason. She has focused on conditioning in practices throughout the year and hopes it will pay off.

Manojlovoch feels the players can't afford to pace themselves when preparing to play more than one match because any letdown can cause a loss.

She encourages her girls to play out every point.

"We've played in three tournaments this year and for us stamina or endurance has never been a question," she said. "I think we'll be in good shape."

Weather shortens clash with Kimball

BY MIKE SCOTT
SPECIAL WRITER

Royal Oak Kimball took advantage of a shortened game Tuesday night and led Clarkston 1-0 in just under 44 minutes of play in Royal Oak. The game may be finished later in the season if the schedule permits according to OAA rules.

The Knights took the lead when striker Carlos Escobar used his speed to beat the Wolves defense and beat Clarkston goalie Dustin Coleman halfway through the first half.

It was a game that was evenly matched, much like the teams' first meeting of the year that ended in a 3-1 Kimball victory. The Knights did a good job of controlling the ball, often using their fullbacks to cleat the ball past the 50-yard line.

The Wolves did have some good scoring chances but Kimball's 4-3-3 alignment was difficult to a team-high 14 points, scored eight points in the run, which ended on a layup by Lindsey Prudhomme.

The Falcons started coming back in the second quarter, but Clarkston held them off. After junior forward Amy Bicknell hit a layup and Harris to pull Rochester within 19-16, Clarkston sophomore Emily Butzine hit a layup and freshman Jenn Carlson made a pair of free throws, and Clarkston still led 23-18 at halftime.

Uchman scored 14 points, while Sarah Morgan and Candace Morgan each scored six for the Wolves (5-4 overall, 1-3 OAA I). Harris scored a game-high 16 points, while Potts and Bicknell finished with 12 apiece.

ment this summer at Bogie Lake Golf Club in White Lake Township.

"It wouldn't have surprised me if he had shot in the mid-70s but a 70 is an unbelievable number," Kaul said.

Benner carried his strong play over from an even-par 35 he posted in Friday's 151-166 victory over Troy Athens at Clarkston Creek. That victory raised the Wolves' dual meet record to 7-2 and marked Clarkston's first even par round of the season before Monday's gem from Churay.

Three other players broke 40 against the Red Hawks on Friday. Harrison shot a 38 while McMillan and Trae Morreen each finished with a 39. Churay's solid round of 40 didn't even count among the top four team scores.

Kaul said Friday's victory probably wasn't a major reason for Monday's finish in the county meet but he added that low rounds always help a player's confidence.

"Golf is a streaky game and we've proven that recently," he said. As an example, Kaul pointed to the fact that Bloomfield Hills Lahser shot a 296 for an 18-hole tournament earlier in the season but was unable to break 330 at Pontiac Country Club Monday.

The Wolves may elevate their postseason expectations and Kaul said his team is capable of qualifying for the state finals. They likely will have to equal the team score that was posted in the county meet but Kaul senses his players now believe in themselves more.

There is a fundamental difference in how many players handle dual match competition compared to tournaments. All major tournaments are 18 holes.

The Wolves will host a talented Lahser team at Clarkston Creek Friday in one of the final dual meets of the season.

Lake Orion finally gets 2nd win of season

Lake Orion has hungered for a win for weeks now.

On their home floor Tuesday night, the Dragons fed the hunger, jumping out to an early lead and bouncing visiting Southfield-Lathrup 45-27 in an Oakland Activities Association Division II girls basketball matchup.

It was Lake Orion's first win since beating Auburn Hills Oakland Christian in the consolation game of the Oxford Lady Wildcats Invitational in the season's first week.

"This feels real good," Lake Orion coach Steve Roberts said. "It's been a long time coming, the kids played really well. It's always good when you win."

The Dragons (2-6, 1-2) scored 13 points and held the Chargers to a pair of baskets in claiming a 13-4 first-quarter lead, then built it to 26-9 after 16 minutes.

The second half was essentially a wash, with Lake Orion outscoring Lathrup 19-18 over the final 16 minutes.

The Dragons won the game with a balanced attack, solid defense and ball control, all things Roberts has been emphasizing at practice.

Junior point guard Jodi Dempsey led the balanced offensive attack with nine points, and she chipped in seven steals and seven rebounds.

Dawn Maynard scored seven points and hauled down 10 rebounds, and Stephanie Gillespie came off the bench to grab eight rebounds and add four points.

Somer George hit one of the two Dragons 3-pointers and scored six points, and Erica Weaver added six points of her own. Beth Martin and Megan Noll each scored four points for Lake Orion.

"They executed the offense, they controlled the ball and they controlled the game," Roberts said of his players. "All the things we've needed to improve on, we went out and showed on the court."

penetrate. Kimball used its overall team speed to bring its forwards back into play when Clarkston threatened the net.

Bill Kalush had a good opportunity to tie the game late in the first half but couldn't convert from close range. Not converting on its scoring chances has been one of the frustrating aspects of this team, head coach Dan Fitzgerald said, and he would like his team to get more shots on net.

"We were fairly effective in our attacking third of the field and we played how we wanted to," Fitzgerald said.

Mike Tharrett played well on defense for the Wolves, clearing no less than four loose balls from deep in Clarkston territory. Coleman also made six saves during the 44 minutes. Freshman Mike Gardner also had a strong game in the middle and had a number of touches.

The game marked a battle between the top two teams in the OAA. To have any chance of winning the league, the Wolves virtually needed a victory against the Knights, who are undefeated in Division II play.

It was a fairly physical game on the tight Kimball High field, which is narrower than Clarkston's home field. Both teams compete well on 50/50 balls and there were a large number of clean tackles.

Player competed in humid conditions in the first half and lightning moved into the area during half-time. The referee's allowed play to start before extensive lightning reappeared followed by a torrential downpour. In high school soccer, referee's must wait 10 minutes after an initial lightning sighting before starting play.

Clarkston plays Rochester Adams this evening in what could be the Wolves' toughest match of the season. The Highlanders are considered legitimate state championship contenders and are looking to duplicate the state title the girls' team won last spring.

Fitzgerald anticipates having to utilize a more defensive style of play against the Highlanders because of their offensive firepower but given it is a crossover, regular season match, he won't have his players grind the pace to a halt.

"We may move a forward back but we'll try to win the game too," he said.

Adams may have an extra incentive after losing to Clarkston in district play a year ago.

Dragons upend Chargers

Boyne, Bavarian Village merge retail operations

BY BILL PARKER
STAFF WRITER

■ 'People can still expect the attention and knowledge gained from our 40 years of experience.'
Richard Held
—Bavarian Village CEO

No more waiting in line to purchase a lift ticket to ski at Boyne Mountain or Boyne Highlands. No more long distance calls to book a tee-time at Bay Harbor Golf Club on picturesque Little Traverse Bay. No more wondering about the weather or snow conditions, either.

A quick trip to the former Bavarian Village store in Bloomfield Hills - or any of Bavarian's other seven locations - will take care of your skiing and golf needs.

Boyne USA Resorts and Bavarian Village International Ski and Golf announced they have merged retail operations.

"We had one goal in mind in bringing these two companies together - to create the best ski and golf shops in the country and enhance the value for our current and future customers nationwide," said Stephen Kircher, managing general manager of Boyne USA Resorts.

Faithful Bavarian Village customers can rest assured they won't notice a decline in services or merchandise - quite the contrary, in fact.

"People can still expect the attention and knowledge gained from our 40 years of experience they've always received at Bavarian Village, augmented with some other things we've never been able to offer," said Richard Held, CEO of Bavarian Village. "We'll be selling discounted lift tickets in the store. We'll be able to utilize the internet with in-store screens for up to the minute ski reports and live video clips from Boyne. It's a win, win, win situation."

Bavarian Village locations are being converted to Boyne Country Sports. Bavarian Village will be the in-store specialty department for skiing and snowboarding. The current Bavarian Village associates will staff the remodeled stores and additional staff will be added as needed during the transition process.

Renovations on the Bloomfield Hills store are expected to begin next spring and should be completed by next winter.

"There will be extensive remodeling, inside and out," Held said. "We're moving the corporate offices to the Bloomfield Hills location and we'll follow the concept of a regional distribution center. We'll put managers in the store and on the floor so they'll be in tune with the needs of our customers."

When the renovations are completed customers will eventually be able to make travel plans in the store. They'll be able to reserve tee times at any one of Boyne's eight championship golf courses, purchase advance lift tickets and make lodging and spa reservations for all Boyne USA properties. In addition, each store will have an American Express Travel Desk, fully staffed with agents specializing in ski and golf travel.

"Beyond getting the best equipment at the best price, we can accommodate all of our customer's other needs," Held said. "Everything we do compliments what Boyne offers."

Rumbling drum is sounding warning

JOE GAGNON

The story you are about to read is true. It has happened across America in many thousands of homes and just about exactly as I am writing it.

It's about a family of parents and two or three children, or the senior citizen couple who live in the high rise towers.

The scenario starts with a typical laundry day in America where the clothes are removed from the washing machine and placed into the clothes dryer.

She emerges from the laundry room and asks the question, "Honey, why is the dryer making that thumping noise when it is turned on and running?" His reply goes something like this: "I don't know. It's still running, isn't it, and drying the clothes? I'll look at it later," and later never comes. Does this picture seem somewhat familiar to some of you?

Imagine what it must be like to wake up at 2 a.m. smelling smoke and finding your laundry room or basement totally engulfed in flames. Imagine the look on your face if you went to the corner store and returned to your house to find flames leaping from your rooftop.

What a shock it must be for a person to suddenly realize, "There's a fire in my house!" It happens to so many people from the clothes dryer in the house, and yet many of these folks had a warning it was going to happen and they failed to react.

The clothes dryer in your home is a square metal box with a drum inside it. The drum is supported by drum rollers, and these parts are called very fast moving parts. By that I don't mean they move at 100 miles per hour; I mean that there are probably a few million of them sold by the service industry every year.

This statement alone should tell you why I sometimes get negative feelings toward appliance manufacturers. Why don't they develop a drum roller that can last a lifetime without failure?

The bearing inside the drum roller goes bad, and when that happens, you start to hear the very common sound of a rumble as the drum turns inside the dryer. This will cause the drum seals to fall off, and the small articles of clothing can fall into the heat chamber. Bingo — you've got a fire!

How about this comment heard by millions: "Honey, how come I'm missing a sock? I know I put a pair into the washing machine yesterday when I did the laundry."

The technicians in the service industry who take a dryer apart for repairs or maintenance will find many items in the bottom of a clothes dryer. They will also find lint that has built up and in some cases even caught fire, which fortunately went out by itself.

As we approach the winter months and shut the windows tight, we also start to breathe the same inner air over and over.

I would like to have you give some thought to the quality of the air you breathe in your home, and you should know that a gas dryer uses 200 cfm of air per minute. Crack a window open during winter while you run the dryer or even when you use the gas range. You'll feel better and probably stop the headaches.

As I described in my last column, Charles Carmack isn't doing well these days and, at age 87, he's fighting hard to recover. It would be nice if you could drop him a card with a little message of love and kindness. The address is: Hope Health Care Center, 38410 Cherry Hill, Westland, MI 48185.

I'll see you at the Bloomfield Chamber Expo the afternoon of Wednesday, Oct. 6. Stop by and meet the people in business who serve your area. Stay tuned.

celebrating family

LISA LUCKOW-HEALY

By the end of summer break, when you feel your relationship with your children at its strongest, the school bell rings.

The scene quickly dissolves from your picture perfect family to a friend frenzy. Friends your children haven't seen all summer resurface. They become the new gravitational pull in your children's lives.

Reality bites. For a moment, you feel the pain of what you've decided is the end to a beautiful family summer. You decide the best medicine for your letdown is an open mind to the realization that you haven't lost your children to their friends. They've simply taken one of life's natural detours on the road to growing up and seeking their independence.

Your children thrive on the love and support you give them. Don't give in to unnecessary anxieties over what you assume is the breakdown of a strong family relationship the moment the children stray from your nest. Respect their cravings for social independence. Find new ways to nurture your family ties that don't impede upon relationships outside your household.

One way to maintain your close parent/child relationship is to keep the lines of communication open. When you close the lines, you may find your children stop reciprocating. Before long, no one in your household has a meaningful conversation. Each person misses out on aspects of the other's life that cannot be re-enacted.

Another way to nurture your family bond is to love your children unconditionally. It shouldn't matter if they are your fishing buddies one day but would rather hang out with friends the next. The last thing you want to do is make your children feel guilty about they way they divide their time.

Demonstrate your love for your children by developing common bonds. As your children grow up, their interests change. Perhaps they've outgrown the love they once had for building sand castles with you. Now they look forward to challenging you to weekend mountain biking, skiing or exploring the Internet.

The more common interests you develop with your children, the greater the opportunities will be to share in each other's life experiences, including accomplishments, setbacks and social issues.

MONTE NAGLER

Have you ever ruined a roll of slow-speed film because you forgot to set back the ASA from that fast roll you shot indoors the previous night? Or have you found yourself not knowing how to expose your picture because you didn't change your battery and it just died?

Well, a little knowledge about a handy photographic rule will prove to be of great value in situations such as these. The rule is called "sunny 16" and here's how it works.

On a sunny day, set your aperture at f-16 and your shutter speed at the number closest to the ASA of the film you are using and a perfect exposure is yours.

For example, if shooting Kodachrome 64 on a sunny day, an exposure of f-16 at 1/60 second will result in a properly exposed shot. Keep in mind that any other combination of aperture and shutter speed will work for the same film.

For instance, f-11 at 1/125 second or f-8 at 1/250 second will produce the identical exposure as the original f-16 at 1/60. Just use the combination you want to get the desired depth-of-field and "stopping power" in your picture.

Using a faster film? The same "sunny 16" rule applies. ASA 400 film requires f-16 at 1/500 second, ASA 1000 film is f-16 at 1/1000 second, etc.

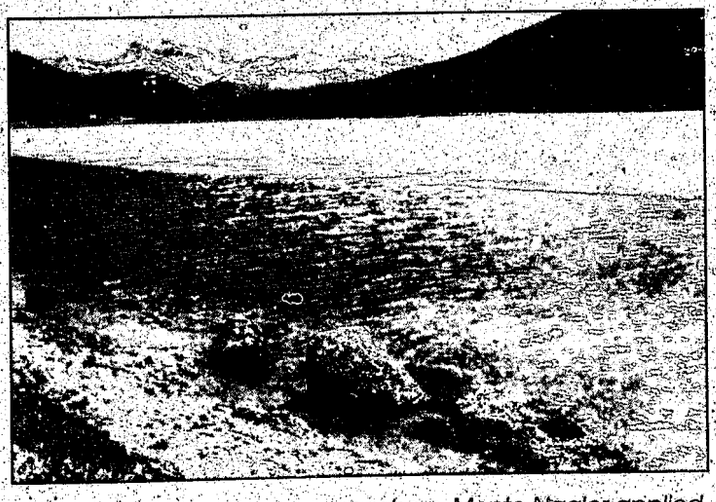

You may ask, "What if it's not sunny?" Well, here's where you use your best judgment. If it's bright overcast outside, open up one f-stop.

So, if you're using Kodachrome 64, set your camera at f-11 at 1/60 second or any compatible combination. If it's normal overcast, open up two f-stops. Heavy overcast or open shade, three f-stops.

See how simple this all is? And you don't have to use the "sunny 16" rule only when your meter isn't working. Use it as a means of checking up on your meter so that you'll know you've set the proper ASA and that your meter is performing satisfactorily.

Understanding the rule of "sunny 16" will assure you of well-exposed photographs, which will certainly give you a sunny disposition!

Monte Nagler is a fine art photographer based in Farmington Hills. You can leave him a message by dialing (734) 953-2047 on a touch-tone phone, then his mailbox number, 1873. His fax number is (248) 644-1314.

Golden rule: No meter necessary here. Monte Nagler applied the rule of "sunny 16" to obtain a perfect exposure of British Columbia's Wapta Lake in Yoho National Park.

Safe at home: Simple can save, enhance s

BY KIMBERLY A. MORTSON
Staff Writer
kmortson@oe.homecomm.net

As we age, home safety modifications become an increasingly important factor in our lives. Making a few simple changes that decrease the likelihood of an accident or injury could mean the difference between life and death.

The staff and designers at Botsford Commons Community in Farmington Hills have initiated numerous safety features throughout all of their facilities including the apartments, condominiums, skilled nursing facility and assisted living center.

Many of the alterations can be done in a residential home or apartment with a little planning and a trip to the hardware store.

According to Kevin Snycerski, LPN and nurse manager of Botsford Commons assisted living facility, the changes at the Farmington Hills campus are suited to accommodate a variety of limitations residents may experience from restricted flexibility and mobility to low vision.

"The idea behind any modification is to allow our residents to maintain as much independence as they can not only socially but physically as well," Snycerski said.

It's the little things

Beginning in the outer hallways of the assisted living facility, colored chair rails in the three main hallways are a subtle reminder to residents of their location in the building in relation to where their room is situated. The colors blend from hallway to hallway by way of the wood chair rails that are actually hand rails cleverly disguised.

"The chair rails look less institutional than metal hand rails and blend in with the design of the facility," said Adele Farrow, RN, BSN and director of Community Health Nursing Service at Botsford Commons.

Snycerski noted small, nondescript shelves that can be found outside residents' doors in the assisted living facility and larger ones in the apartment buildings. These give residents the space to set down small packages, mail or other items while they're opening their door rather than having to juggle several items at a time.

"Some residents place an item on the shelf, such as a plant or flower arrangement, that serves to identify their room," Farrow said of someone who may be experiencing memory-related problems.

Other considerations include more lighting, ramped hallways rather than stairs, low nap carpeting, peep holes installed at two levels for a wheelchair-bound resident and lever door handles and sink hardware.

"If a person has arthritis turning a kno

Slip and fall

One of the biggest fears of the elde falling unnecessarily. There are dozens o cautions that can be made to avoid su occurrence. Here are a few examples ac citizens and caregivers.

- Use only non-skid mats and carpet while bathing.

- If you use rugs or mats in the bath or any of your living areas, use double tape to secure them to the floor.

and allow extra space between furniture if you use a walker.

Helen Auberlin, 85, a resident of Botsford Assisted Living Facility since March, has found the spacious rooms and hallways to be very accommodating as the user of a walker.

"I just don't have the confidence. My legs give me a problem and I like the big, clean rooms."

Auberlin also appreciates the bench and hand rails in the shower that allow her to sit down or give her legs some relief from standing.

The Botsford Commons nurse manager said many safety considerations were evaluated when the facility was being remodeled for opening in 1998 and when the apartments and condominiums were being constructed. Added safety elements include:

- lighted electrical switches (easier to find in the dark or if you have poor vision); electrical outlets installed higher on the wall to reduce the need to bend over; four times the normal lighting; no switches on wall (back splash) behind kitchen counter; kitchen vent fan switch at cabinet level; side by side refrigerator and oven separate from stove top for easy access and to avoid lifting heavy items.
- blended floors as you approach the shower; tilted mirrors in the bathroom for residents in wheelchairs or persons who can't stand for very long; hand held and wall-mounted shower heads; and shower benches.
- slower elevator doors that open and close from the cue of an electric eye; residential doors that close slower and can be adjusted to close with less force; Braille on the elevator switch panels and on nameplates outside each residential room.
- closet shelves can be adjusted lower to create shorter distances a person has to reach.
- voice-activated programming for computer users and large computer screens.
- high back chairs in the dining room for better support and tables that adjust up and down for wheelchair-bound residents.
- thermostats with larger numbers (1 inch high); lower water temperatures to eliminate scalding accidents; emergency pull cords; and outdoor lighting at the condominiums that's illuminated when the emergency cord is pulled.

Is your residence safe? Check it out with this list

ENTRANCE: Can you enter the house or apartment safely? Is a secure railing present? Can you view visitors prior to entry? Is the lock in working order?

Read all about it in gardening books

MARTY FIGLEY

Gardening books, books, books. They are full of information for the gardener.

Six handy books of a series of 12 Practical Guides from the American Horticultural Society, published by Dorling Kindersley ($8.95 each) are now available.

The titles are "Gardening in Shade," "Containers," "Herb Gardens," "Ponds and Water Features," "Perennials" and "Clematis."

Each follows a similar format and includes design (and hardscape how-tos), plant care, lists of recommended plants and the like. Good, expert advice with plenty of illustrations and photos to whet the appetite.

The third edition of "From Vines to Wines," Jeff Cox (Storey Books, $18.95), explains in detail how to grow healthy grapes that will soon be turned into an elixir for which the creator can be proud. Cox, HGTV host, has been practicing this craft since 1971 and shares his knowledge with skill.

"The purpose... is to bring the reader swiftly and surely to the goal of excellence... hope that the material... will help readers do their very best with this delicate task of home winemaking," he says.

Look no further. From choosing the right grapes, growing site to harvest – it's here. You'll learn about fermentation, airlocks and racking, and other things necessary to make wine. Resource lists round out the information.

"Natural Stonescapes: The Art and Craft of Stone Placement," Richard Dube, APLD, and Frederick Campbell (Storey Books, $24.95), includes some illustrations of famous stoneworks, i.e. Stonehenge, Easter Island, the menhirs (upright stones) of Carnac in Brittany, France, and stone used by landscape artists.

From walls to stone used in Japanese gardens, the trend now is to use stone in modern landscapes and many photos illustrate the importance of placement. The point from which the design is viewed is discussed, as is how to find the right stone. Color photos illustrate an installation and black and white drawings show the correct way to place the groupings.

"The Ornamental Vegetable Garden," Diana Anthony (Warwick Publishing, distributed by Firefly Books, $19.95), is a beautifully illustrated book about this subject.

Growing attractive vegetables seems to be the next challenge to gardeners, and this book is an excellent guide. We learn that not only can this type of garden be practical and easy-care, it can be lovely and full of delicious food.

Whether your space is large or small, you'll find help here. No-soil and tiny-space gardens are included. Along with the enticing photos by Gil Hanly, the author gives much advice about structure, paths and the like. Growing tips and interesting facts about many plants are featured. The final chapter deals with organic management.

Encyclopedic in style, "100 Easy-to-grow Native Plants for American Gardens in Temperate Zones," Lorraine Johnson (Firefly, $19.95), will get new gardeners off to a good start. There is probably a new plant or so for more experienced gardeners, too.

The book grew out of a study in which Johnson participated in about the time and "inputs" (water, fertilizers, etc.) necessary to maintain her mostly native plant meadow garden. The title of the book then, truly reflects her kind of gardening.

A description and a color photo, information about maintenance, propagation, related species and good companions is included for each plant. A small photo of the plants for specific conditions, woodland, meadow, acidic soil, etc. is great for quick reference.

"Night Gardening," E.L. Swann (Hyperion, $16.95), is a most delightful novel about gardening, relationships, determination and love.

Maggie, who loves her garden, has had a stroke that has left her somewhat disabled but determined. Tristan, a landscape designer, is installing a large garden next door. A wall that has deteriorated separates the two properties. They meet when he sees her (through a crack in the wall) trying desperately to learn to walk again and something "clicks."

The story of their times in the garden and the love that grew is an inspiration. One line stands out, about an unattractive plant: "You should never have to be beautiful to be in a garden... there is always a place for character actors." Don't miss this story.

Make sweets for your sweetest one

RUTH MOSSOK JOHNSTON

While I don't appreciate the card companies orchestrating my holidays or the specific days to be nice to the people I love, the concept of Sweetest Day (Saturday, Oct. 16, this year) is rather a nice one.

Make Oct. 16 a real sweetest day, emphasis on sweetest, and prepare a sumptuous sweet for the one you love. Make the dessert to share together and include the recipe in a lovely decorated envelope.

RUTH'S PEANUT BUTTER MOUSSE TORTE

Yield: 10-12 servings

Ingredients for the crust:

2 cups chocolate-wafer cookie crumbs

1 cup ground peanuts

1/2 cup (1 stick) unsalted butter, melted

Ingredients for the peanut butter mousse:

3 teaspoons unflavored powdered gelatin

1/3 cup cold water

3/4 pound (12 ounces) peanut butter chips

4 tablespoons unsalted butter, melted

2 teaspoons pure vanilla extract

3/4 cups heavy whipping cream

3 1/2 tablespoons superfine sugar (or to taste)

Ingredients for the whipping cream layer:

1 3/4 cups heavy whipping cream

Superfine sugar (to taste)

Ingredients for the meringue:

3 tablespoons dark brown sugar

1/2 tablespoon Creme De Cacao

2 large fresh egg whites

Chocolate shavings for garnish

Additional equipment:

Parchment paper

Preheat the oven to 275 degrees F. Spray the bottom and sides of a 9-inch springform pan.

In a bowl, combine chocolate wafer crumbs, ground peanuts and melted butter; mix well. Press mixture evenly on bottom and sides of pan. Bake crust for 25 minutes; remove from oven and let cool.

Directions for the peanut butter mousse filling:

In a small bowl, sprinkle gelatin over 1/3 cup cold water. Let soften for 5 minutes. Transfer to small saucepan, let gelatin dissolve over low heat.

In a double boiler over simmering water, melt peanut butter chips. Stir with a rubber spatula to smooth; turn off heat. Whisk in dissolved gelatin; whisk in melted butter and vanilla extract. Continue to whisk ingredients until mixture is smooth.

Beat whipping cream in a chilled bowl with an electric mixer, adding superfine sugar one teaspoon at a time; beat mixture until it holds stiff peaks. Add whipped cream in large spoonfuls to peanut butter and whisk in each addition.

Preheat oven to 250 degrees F. Line 2 heavy baking sheets with parchment paper.

In a small bowl, mix together 3 tablespoons sugar, 1 tablespoon brown sugar and 1/2 tablespoon Creme De Cacao, set aside.

In a bowl, beat egg whites with an electric mixer until stiff peaks form.

Add 4 tablespoons sugar and 2 tablespoons brown sugar to egg whites (add by tablespoons). Fold in liqueur-sugar mixture.

Drop meringue by rounded tablespoons on prepared baking sheets. Bake until meringues are dry (about 45 minutes). Lift meringues from parchment and transfer to cooling racks. Set aside.

Beat whipping cream in chilled bowl with an electric mixer, adding superfine sugar one teaspoon at a time. Beat mixture until it holds stiff peaks.

Gently place whipped cream over firm peanut butter mousse filling.

Top whipped cream layer with meringue dollops. Garnish top of torte with chocolate shavings.

Cook's Notes:

■ A great powdered gelatin is available at all Kitchen Glamour stores.

■ Superfine sugar is on the grocery shelf with the other sugar. Want to make it yourself? Just process sugar in a food processor until fine.

Service builds up contractor trust

BY MARY KLEMIC
At Home Editor
mklemic@oe.homecomm.net

A special foundation has been laid to increase trust between consumers and home improvement professionals.

A "Contractor Appreciation Day" took place Saturday at the Summit on the Park community center in Canton. About 20 construction associations from throughout Michigan attended to pledge their commitment to honest business practices.

Contractor Appreciation Day was sponsored by ImproveNet, a large independent service on the Internet helping with home improvement projects.

The event was a combination of high technology and the personal, with online demonstrations, displays by businesses and agencies, and clowns entertaining youngsters of the contractors and employees. The ImproveNet service is a similar combination, with the Internet providing individual assistance for specific projects.

"We're the only one in Michigan that does this," said Tina Ruark, manager of the greater Detroit area for ImproveNet and formerly president of The Service Connection in Livonia, which linked consumers to licensed contractors.

ImproveNet started in California in 1996 and went nationwide the next year. It is a free service that helps match reliable contractors, designers and architects with consumers. ImproveNet has compiled a network of 630,000 contractors throughout the country that it has extensively screened.

"We match homeowners who want to hire a contractor to do home improvement with our prescreened contractor base," said Scott Bly, vice president and regional director of the Great Lakes Region (which includes Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, western Pennsylvania, western New York and northern Kentucky).

"Here you have a partner."

ImproveNet checks a contractor's credit, legal history and references. Its Web site features design ideas, product information and advice from experts.

A homeowner wondering where to start to find a contractor or other professional can provide the specifics of the project to ImproveNet, which will give the homeowner the names of professionals to contact.

As work on the project continues, ImproveNet can keep in touch and help the communication between business and consumer.

On display at Saturday's event was a large proclamation, "The Honest Hammer Pledge," bearing an image of a hammer wearing a halo. The pledge declared to provide fair and accurate estimates, deliver quality work, strive for timely project completion, always respect customers' property and deal with them honestly.

Nearby on a table was a cake shaped like the state of Michigan, adorned with a slash through the word SCAM.

Almost 25,000 contractors were screened by ImproveNet in Michigan, of which just more than one-third passed the initial screening tests.

Area contractors who are ImproveNet certified professionals were on hand Saturday. They included William Frizzell, who has been a contractor for more than 30 years, and Larry Rospierski, who has 25 years of experience as a local contractor.

Frizzell, president/ owner of William Frizzell Builders Inc. of Waterford, compared the ImproveNet relationship to a "big brother" or "mother" type of protection.

"It's not like buying a car," he said of home improvement work. "You may remodel your home (only) once or twice."

"You have to maintain that high level of quality," said Rospierski, owner of the Long Lake Building Co. of Farmington Hills.

Also present were Canton Supervisor Tom Yack and a representative of U.S. Rep. Joe Knollenberg's office.

For information, call Ruark at (888) 509-4987 or visit www.improvenet.com

Mall changes name, now carries consignment furniture

Downtown Walled Lake's Countryside Craft & Antique Mall is now the Town Peddler Craft & Antique Mall and now carries quality consignment furniture in addition to crafts and antiques.

The Town Peddler is at 1154 E. West Maple in the Maple Plaza Shopping Center. Call (248) 926-8650.

When the former partners of Countryside Craft and Antique Mall decided to dissolve the partnership, Linda Macchaiarolo, the founder of Countryside and the owner of the Walled Lake and Livonia locations, seized the opportunity to offer something new to customers.

"I believe that both the sellers and buyers of newer previously owned furniture will appreciate the safety and convenience of this venue."

The seller prevents strangers from having his or her phone number and address. Consignment furniture buyers have a selection of items at a convenient retail environment, which saves them time.

Those interested in selling used, but good quality furniture should bring a photo to the Town Peddler management. If the piece is selected, the owner will bring in the item and will be given a number.

For a 40-percent commission, the Town Peddler will display the furniture and will send a check when the item sells.

"The numerous new residential projects such as the 201-unit Eagle Pond Heights apartment building will give the Town Peddler and other merchants specializing in housewares an excellent opportunity to succeed in downtown Walled Lake," said Tracy White, Downtown Development Authority director of business retention and recruitment.

The Walled Lake DDA was created in 1990 to ensure the ongoing growth and improvement of downtown Walled Lake. It is responsible for business recruitment, retention and marketing of the downtown.

'Swimming in Mercury' Stewart Francke's musical antidote to year-long struggle

New lease: Stewart Francke recorded many of the tracks for his new CD in his home studio.

BY FRANK PROVENZANO

While he maintains his trademark, rugged, wind-blown appearance, there's a look of a battle-weary soldier in Stewart Francke's eyes. A mixed expression of utter joy and a haunting reminder that he's emerging from a trip to the depths of despair and physical exhaustion.

Before his 16-month battle with leukemia, Francke had the look of an eternally youthful optimist, who, like one of his most admired songwriters, Paul McCartney, reveled in filling the world with love songs.

Unlike the saccharine flavor of many pop songwriters, however, Francke's narrative style, at its best, creates a sense of place with an uncommon eloquence, and an unremitting positive color.

Since 1995, Francke has released five CDs, each receiving critical notice. Last year's lushly lyrical "Sunflower Soul Serenade" was named album of the year at the Detroit Music Awards, where Francke also picked up songwriter of the year award.

This Saturday, he and his band will perform songs from his new CD, "Swimming In Mercury," at the Magic Bag in Ferndale, a place where Francke has played to overflow crowds.

"To be on stage is all about life," said Francke, who did cartwheels at a performance earlier in the year. "Twenty years ago, if I had leukemia, I'd be dead by now."

But now, thankfully – and some may say heroically – Francke is back in the game.

Through the heart

In the past year, Francke has seen the extremes of life. Not as a witness, but as a cancer patient, poisoned, as he writes in "Swimming In Mercury," within a hush of death.

"I can now see through the human heart," he said. "It's a beautiful and terrifying place."

At one point during his stay in the hospital, Francke suffered complications from having his immune system depleted. He developed pericarditius, an inflammation of the heart, a potentially life-threatening condition.

As he waited with his father outside an X-ray room where he would be tested to determine if his condition had worsened into an inflamation of his heart valves, Francke recalled that the realization settled in. His father, a former mayor of Saginaw and successful owner of a car dealership, was the prototypical John Wayne, stiff-upper-chin type. But on that night, he was a father grieving the possible loss of his only son.

"I was in a wheelchair, not a hair on my head, and I looked up, and there was my father," said Francke. "He looked beaten."

His son, however, wasn't.

Other side

"Everyone dies too soon," said Francke. "But I really felt like I wasn't done with what I had to do. That there was so much left in me to do."

For his upcoming CD release concert, he simultaneously courts media attention while remaining cautious about appearing self-serving.

"My great fear is that some people might think that having cancer is a career move," said Francke, who established a non-profit foundation to help raise funds for people who can't afford to pay for bone marrow transplants. He also consults leukemia patients at the Karmanos Cancer Institute.

"Swimming In Mercury" is a metaphor of both the poison he endured and the triumph of having reached the other side. It's the type of literary reference that distinguishes Francke's writing.

But make no mistake about it.

■ 'I can now see through the human heart. It's a beautiful and terrifying place.'

– Stewart Francke

The "swim" was like treading water in a shark-infested, oil spill that had been set on fire.

At a point when everything in his musical career and personal life seemed to be coming together, Francke was, in his own words, drawn into the shadow.

Emotions were like tidal waves. Uncontainable and rushing out of control. He read everything he could about leukemia. Learned about his odds.

"When you're survival is at stake, you take on the mentality of a soldier," he said.

The war knew no boundaries.

The photos taped to the IV pole in which he clung were two causes to win the battle – his daughter, Tess, and his son, Stewart. Neither could visit their father because he was in quarantine.

"I didn't know if I'd see them again."

Human cannonball gets a charge from his job

BY KEELY WYGONIK
STAFF WRITER
kwygonik@oe.homecomm.net

Being shot out of a cannon a couple of times a day is one of the crazier things Mark Myers has done for a living, but he's having fun.

"When everything happens right, it's like flying," said Myers, one of the featured performers in the 128th edition of the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus coming to Joe Louis Arena Oct. 7-10. "When I land in the net, I think, they pay me do this, to have fun. It's great, it's wonderful."

Myers is part of an act that includes Vesta Gueschkova, a gymnast. They fly through the air, side by side, after being shot out of side by side canons.

Being shot and propelled 85 feet at over 65 miles an hour by the force of a canon is the easy part; landing is hard. If you land on your head, you could break your neck. Land on your legs, and you'll break them. Myers always tries to land on his back.

"I've hurt my fingers holding onto the net," said Myers in a telephone interview from Kansas City. "Nothing serious. We're overly cautious.

Mark Myers

We watch video tapes of our performances to catch little problems that could become big problems. If you twist in the air you can't see where you're going. During the flight you have to control your rotation. You have to keep your toes pointed and your feet together. My partner rotated sideways and fractured her shoulder."

Even if you're careful and focused, the job is not without hazards.

"It's a job that makes your lower back sore," said Myers.

Mounting the musical "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat" can take on biblical proportions. Just ask some of the local community theater groups that have performed it – including Nancy Gurwin Productions in West Bloomfield or the current production at Stagecrafters, which runs through Oct. 10 and sold out all 15 shows and a dress rehearsal before the show had even opened.

Nancy Florkowski of Redford, the artistic director of Tinderbox Productions/Youth Music Theatre of Detroit, knows firsthand the appeal of "Joseph" to audiences – times 24. That's how many shows Florkowski sat through of "Joseph" in 1996 as a chaperone at the Fox Theatre.

Tinderbox's group of 23 kids was one of two children's choirs to perform onstage with the professional touring cast that featured Donny Osmond as Joseph. Their choir competed against 20 others for the coveted spot in the musical.

"I think the reason why groups keep putting on 'Joseph' and why it tours so often is a combination of factors," said Cate Foltin, executive director of Stagecrafters. "One, the music is superb. It's basically a feel-good show. It's a story that everyone knows and, by now, everyone is familiar with the musical. You can actually walk out humming the music."

Which is exactly what theater-goers will be doing when "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat" returns to the Masonic Temple Theatre Oct. 5-10.

Osmond family

Subtract one Osmond and you get six in exchange. Uncle Donny has made way for nephews Michael, Nathan, Scott, Jon, Alex and Tyler – better known as the Osmond 2nd Generation – to tour in "Joseph" for their third time around. Last year's tour, which began in May of 1998, starred Osmond 2nd Generation brother David Osmond in the title role of Joseph.

JOAN MARCUS

Talented family: The Osmond 2nd Generation stars in "Joseph & The Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat."

David is currently a missionary in Spain on behalf of the family's Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. And, at press time, the eighth 2nd Generation brother, Doug, was en route from South Africa, where he too served as a missionary. Doug was going straight to Minneapolis where he would re-join his brothers for the '99 tour of "Joseph."

"I first saw 'Joseph' on opening night in Toronto with my Uncle Donny as the lead when I was seven or eight," said 24-year-old Michael Osmond, the oldest of Alan and Suzanne Osmond's eight sons. "I went with my brothers and we met (composer) Andrew Lloyd Weber. He was very nice. That was the first time we had ever seen 'Joseph,' and we fell in love with the show."

Eight siblings seem to be the requirement for being cast in any "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat" production. After all, there are eight kids in the Kuhn-Ellison brood of Royal Oak. Brad Ellison, 18, stars as Joseph in the Stagecrafters production, with four of his seven siblings joining him on the Baldwin Theatre stage.

While eight is enough for the Osmond 2nd Generation, it continues to be a family affair at "Joseph." The four Osmond brothers play four of 12 brothers in the story, and the youngest Osmonds, Alex and Tyler, are in the Dream choir. Add to that stage, film and TV star Patrick Cassidy, who stars as Joseph, and Cassidy's real-life wife, Melissa Hurley, who plays the character Potiphar's wife. The Cassidys travel with their two sons, Cole and Jack, and nanny on this tour.

Riding on faith: Stewart Francke has translated his struggle to overcome leukemia into insightful messages about the joy of living and the despair of suffering in his new CD, "Swimming In Mercury."

from his sister, Kit Reece of Troy, last October, a six-week stay in the hospital and about seven months of recovery in his Huntington Woods home, Francke, 41, has re-emerged as an ordained apostle of faith. His voice – once so weak that he had to build up his strength by practicing scales – is more passionate and urgent.

While he often catches himself before he gets "preachy," Francke is keenly aware of his time and place. And the lessons of the past year are strewn throughout the 11 tracks.

From the opening homage to his wife, Julia, "Keep Your Faith, Darling," to his wondering about those who would crucify the prince of peace, "For Want of A Nail," to a compelling anthem for father and sons, "Swimming in Mercury" is hardly a rumination of death and fear.

On the contrary, Francke's bouncing, driving melodies are a Springsteenesque reaffirmation that it's not a sin to be glad you're alive.

With Francke, don't expect the typical MTV-version rock musician. He readily recites a passage from Emerson, ponders the simplicity of Bach's Sonata, and contemplates the meaning of pop culture and rock and roll. A former award-winning music writer for the Metro Times, Francke has interviewed many of rock's top performers.

He easily recites pop music history and tradition. One track on his new CD, "Prowlin'," is a nod to the inspiration from Motown greats.

"Rock and roll is a living and breathing art form," he said.

And the focus in "Swimming In Mercury" is clearly on living.

"My whole record is about faith," he said. "It took great faith just to produce it."

For Francke, life has become an allegory. The past year, a parable. The future may be unknown, but the path is far from unclear.

"I caught a bad break, but it's what you do with breaks," he sings in the endearing, "Letter From Ten Green." Francke composed the words of the song as a letter to his two young children during the bleak days quarantined in the hospital.

The lyrics read as a fatherly sermon: "Trust your talents from being a gift from above/Stay in the light/Give your life to helping others and loving deeply/Have a humble respect for all living things/Believe in other people/They're good, more often than they're not."

It's a message many fathers should study. It's a message seldom heard in today's commercial sound-alike pop market.

Then again, to know the secrets of life, one has to walk through the den of death.

Ditto for Michael Osmond. Osmond, whose wife, Beka, also plays one of the wives in the show, carried the family tradition of "Joseph" to the utmost extreme when their first baby, Suzannah, was born on opening night of "Joseph" in Dallas 16 months ago. Just a few weeks back, history practically repeated itself when Sarah Ann was born.

"Beka's due date was around Sept. 18, when we would have been in Minneapolis," says Michael. "But it worked out perfectly. We had two weeks off to rest up before starting the tour on Sept. 14. Sarah Ann was born early on 9/9/99 – we're really excited about that date."

Beka and Sarah Ann joined up with Michael and Suzannah in Minneapolis, before heading to Detroit's Masonic Temple with the entire cast and crew.

Proud grandparents Alan and Suzanne will keep an eye on the Osmond 3rd Generation girls backstage and Suzannah's Barbies and inflatable Barbie chair.

"Our family can't get away from 'Joseph,'" jokes Michael. "It's a fun, family-oriented show. And we just enjoy it. It's got a good message that everyone can relate to."

What could be next for the Osmond Eight?

"We're kind of bouncing around the idea of 'Seven Brides for Seven Brothers,'" quipped Michael.

Seems as if they won't have to do much rehearsing to get the brothers' roles down pat.

Being a human cannonball wasn't something he pictured himself doing. Myers performed in school plays in high school and wasn't sure what he wanted to do with his life. Acting was something he was considering and clowning.

In 1989 he earned a diploma from Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Clown College, but he wasn't asked to join the show. He was hired by the Clyde Beatty Cole Circus, which tours the East and Gulf Coasts, and met former daredevil and canon consultant Elvin Bale.

Myers took his first shot at this career in 1993 and began to consider it.

"I did more theater and acting," he said. "Then Elvin told me they had a woman but needed a guy for the show."

The thought of traveling around the country with Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey was appealing, so Myers began training for the job with Bale.

It takes a special person to be a human cannonball.

"You have to have a sense of balance," said Myers. "You don't want someone clumsy or who walks stiff. You have to be graceful, cat-like. My parents had a trampoline since I was 8 years old. I have good 'air sense' I know where my body is in relation to the ground."

Human cannonball is not a job for a big person. Myers is 28, 5-feet-7-inches tall, and weighs 145 pounds.

"Logistically, it's easier for a person of medium height to be thrown by the canon," he said.

But like any other job, Myers does have his off days.

"Some days I'll be distracted by life and it goes by so fast, like a flash, and boom, it's over. Other days, I'm really focused, and it goes by in slow motion."

Being shot out of a canon is not something you have to rehearse. He's done it so many times that it's become repetitious. To prepare, Myers lift weights, runs and stretches. He also visualizes a perfect outcome.

"I picture myself doing everything perfect in my head," he said.

Still an actor at heart, Myers compares Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey to a Broadway show. The Three Ring Adventure, one hour prior to show time, which allows families to interact with the performers, is one of his favorite things.

"People really love it," he said. "It's something you can't do anywhere else. You get to meet the cast before the show."

Local production of 'Death of a Salesman' will be on PBS

If you haven't been on the edge of your easy chair waiting for the season premiere of Detroit Public Television's BACKSTAGE PASS, I won't hold it against you.

After all, the show never really went away for the summer, as it continued to bring you fresh music performances and an update of cultural activities around town.

It's also common in TV to offer a cliff-hanging season finale. That's just not our style. Oh, I suppose we could have gone with something like "Who shot Willy Loman? Tune in to 'Death of a Salesman' on BACKSTAGE PASS." When you found out that we were speaking in video terms and the answer is a camera operator you've never heard of, you wouldn't be pleased with the deception.

Nevertheless, the season opener to premiere Sunday, Oct. 3, at 7:30 p.m. on Channel 56 is tempting.

It features the gripping drama of the Theatre Company's production of "Death of a Salesman" at U-D Mercy, the exciting and unpredictable music of Edgefest in Ann Arbor, and the thrills and chills without spills of Dance Noncel at St. Columba Catholic Church in Detroit.

Thanks for your indulgence on my annual blatant plug.

It has been fifty years since Arthur Miller's "Death of a Salesman" first opened in New York City, and after a half-century of many noteworthy productions on stage and small screen, it is considered the quintessential American play. However, its age and familiarity to theater audiences do not limit its relevance or appeal.

"The truths that emerge about family life in 'Death of a Salesman' are universal. Audiences have an opportunity to become deeply involved with the character development of individual family members.

"It is especially captivating to see the way the sons are able to get a penetrating look into their parent's lives," says Blair Anderson, the Wayne State University theatre department director who hosts the BACKSTAGE PASS segment.

It was somewhat unusual for The Theatre Company to select such a mainstream play for its season opening run from Oct. 8 - 24 at U - D Mercy's McAuley Theatre.

Innovative but lesser-known off-broadway type productions have been the Company's niche, one that has been rewarded by a very committed and loyal audience.

The Theatre Company's practice of casting professional actors with students has paid off in consistently high-quality productions. "Death of a Salesman" should benefit from the guest directing of Geoffrey Sherman, who departed as Meadow Brook Theatre's artistic director earlier this year.

"It will be interesting to see the touches that the British-born director applies to the play. But, then again, everyone wondered how this story rooted in capitalistic America would be received during a recent run in China, and it did gangbusters in Beijing," says Anderson.

Expressive artist has deep-felt passion for his music

BY ARA TOPOUZIAN
SPECIAL WRITER

It's great to hear a musician who's not only talented but can also can convey the soul of his music. Many people in the music business must perform to make a living. They enjoy their music but have to continuously play in order to put food on the table. The almighty dollar becomes more important than the message they try to convey to their audience.

When audiences can feel the connection between the song and musician's inner feeling, you have a true artist. Michael Nolan is such a musician and performs for the purpose of self-gratification and enjoyment. His ability to entertain audiences has been a natural occurrence since he was a child growing up in Royal Oak.

Nolan's first experience performing in front of audiences was at an open mike night at the old Four Greenfield nightclub in Royal Oak.

"It was my first opportunity to play guitar and have a taste of the music I wanted to perform," said Nolan. While attending Michigan State University, Nolan rarely performed his music, playing only once with a band the year he graduated from college. His career did not really begin until he was the lead singer, songwriter and rhythm guitarist for the local rock group, Tearjerks.

"With Tearjerks, I stepped up in the level of performance arenas," said Nolan. The group performed together from 1994 to 1996, breaking up shortly after being nominated for two 1995 Detroit Music Awards.

The breakup of the band meant that Nolan had to discover his own niche in music. He searched for that particular sound by performing solo acoustic guitar at area coffeehouses. He tried new material and focused on a style of music that would be synonymous with his abilities. Nolan began recording several original tracks of music in a garage-recording studio. Influenced by guitarists Richard Thompson and the Beatles, Nolan began to compose his material in a unique fashion.

"I tend to write three songs at a time. The rhythms are similar and this has been the way I have written my songs," he said.

In 1998, Nolan was finally recognized for his musical talents when he received five nominations in the categories of folk and rock music at the annual Detroit Music Awards.

"It felt great to be recognized for my talent by a genuine listening audience. The 1998 nominations in essence, served as a public acknowledgment that 'I'm out there too.' I'm grateful for that," said Nolan.

His latest CD, "Venus," is a collection of original compositions. Nolan has worked on this recording for a few years gathering material and recording it. The songs on this recording represent everything from the garage-made demos to studio recorded songs, a personal collection representing three years of work. The title of his CD was inspired by Venus de Milo, which represents love and beauty.

"I chose the song name 'Venus' (In My Hands) because it was the closest thing to a love song title," said Nolan. A direct connection can be made from the design of his CD to the songs featured on his album. "Venus" is dedicated to his father, who flew for the Marines during the Vietnam War. An interesting picture of Nolan's father and Raymond Burr can be seen on the inside tray card.

It is clear after listening to Nolan's "Venus" that he is a sensitive and caring individual producing music that has a deeper meaning than most other music of this genre.

Although music is a very important aspect of Nolan's life, it has taken a back seat these days. Currently living in Hamtramck, Nolan and his supportive wife, Spring, are expecting their first child. Nolan is far from hanging up his musical hat. His devotion to his music keeps him performing throughout the Detroit area. He also wants to release another album before the year 2000.

"I'm most interested in getting my current songs recorded so that I can work on finishing new ones. I'm also hoping to expand my song writing by collaborating with my band mates. In the meantime, I'll just keep playing local shows either solo acoustic or with the band. The quest for record deals and popularity contests no longer seems important. Making music though, still does."

Copies of "Venus" are available by calling (313) 438-0724.

Mike Nolan will be performing at the Coyote Club in Pontiac on Saturday, Nov. 27. Call the club for details.

Titanic exhibition features artifacts from the original ship

BY LEE SNIDER
STAFF WRITER
lsnider@oehomecomm.net

Few disasters of this or any other century have taken hold of the public's imagination quite like the star-crossed maiden voyage of the R.M.S. Titanic.

The tale of the doomed liner, brought vividly to life in the feature film mega-hit by director James Cameron, is more intriguing than ever for disaster enthusiasts. Now, Titanic fans can view some of the remains and artifacts of the great sea tragedy in an exhibition showing in Toronto.

"Titanic: The Exhibition" is sure to be a crowd-pleaser, as it offers the public a glimpse of many items lifted from the wreckage of the ship at the bottom of the North Atlantic. On display will be such articles as a bronze cherub from the ship's grand staircase, the ship's main steam whistle, a 1,000-pound davit from which lifeboats were lowered, silver dinnerware, fine china and jewelry and a gilt chandelier.

More commonplace articles include an unopened jar of olives, a preserved stock certificate and a suit of clothes from an unknown passenger.

At the center of the exhibit is a 30-foot-long model of the ship's wreckage, a model of the Titanic prior to the voyage and a display of the high-tech equipment used in the recovery of the artifacts.

"Through viewing these objects recovered from the wreck of the Titanic, together with the sights and sounds of the multimedia displays; abstract thoughts about Titanic become complete," said George Tulloch, the president of RMS Titanic Inc., the company which conducted the salvage expeditions more than two miles beneath the ocean surface.

"The viewer is able to feel and experience a sense of reality of this profound tragedy in a very personal and individual way."

Crews from RMS Titanic Inc. conducted research and recovery operations in the North Atlantic, and in five expeditions from 1987 to 1998 recovered more than 5,000 artifacts from the wreckage site. The items have been assembled and presented to audiences in Europe, Asia and the United States. It is estimated that more than 4 million people have viewed the Titanic's remains since they have gone on display at various cities around the world.

RMS Titanic Inc. was formed expressly for the purpose of exploring the wreckage of the great ship. In 1994, a federal court granted the company salvor-in-possession rights to the wreckage. The company has also taken responsibility for the historic preservation of all artifacts and has made a commitment to keep the objects together as a collection for public exhibition. A pledge has been made not to sell items to private collectors.

The Titanic went down in April 1912. More than 1,500 people – or about two-thirds of all passengers and crew members aboard the ship – died in the disaster.

classic comedy with a twist
SEPT 15 THROUGH OCT 10
Thirty years ago, Neil Simon's hilarious comedy poked fun at a couple of guys "batching it." In 1986, Simon rewrote the play to show that mismatched female roomies can be just as odd – and even funnier – a couple! Florence Ungar and Olive Madison play Trivial Pursuit instead of poker, and the Costazuela brothers replace the Pigeon sisters, but the humor's still uproarious.

'American Beauty' offers sterling performances

BY VICTORIA DIAZ
SPECIAL WRITER

"American Beauty" isn't pretty. And, despite pre-publicity and the laughs the picture evokes now and then, it really isn't much of a comedy, either.

It's a quirky, off-beat drama about a suburban husband and father who, in the midst of a mid-life crisis, meets the girl of his dreams. A girl, mind you, not a woman. Worse yet, she's his teen-aged daughter's best friend, a rosy-lipped femme fatale named Angela (Mena Suvari).

Built around haunting images, thought-provoking notions, surreal and dream-like touches, an engaging script by debut screenwriter Alan Ball, characters (no matter how minor) that seem like vignettes in themselves, and, above all, some absolutely sterling performances, "American Beauty" is a movie that is fascinating to watch even when it is disturbing to see.

Directed by Sam Mendes (who, before this film, had focused on theater hits like "Cabaret" and "The Blue Room"), "American Beauty" begins with the words of suburbanite Lester Burnham (Kevin Spacey). "This is my life," he intones, as we look down, via a bird's-eye view, upon what seems to be a pleasant, untroubled neighborhood. "In less than a year I'll be dead. Of course I don't know that yet. In a way I'm dead already."

Why such cryptic comments?

Maybe our hero means that, inside that lovely home of his (the one with the perfect door to match the perfect red roses growing against the perfect picket fence), his life feels drained away and "sedated." His wife, Carolyn (played like she'd forgotten to take her medication by Annette Bening), doesn't seem to feel any passion toward anything except appearances and her success in real estate. His sullen daughter (Thora Birch) is lost to him. His job as a magazine writer is, shall we say, less than satisfying, and is about to be out the door, anyway. Things are bad all over.

When Les meets the curvaceous, kittenish Angela, however, he feels transformed. So transformed, in fact, that he quits the job he's had for 14 years, takes up flipping burgers, purchases the arrest-me-red Firebird he's always wanted, starts bulking up, investing in the best grass (the kind you smoke, not the kind you mow), trying to seduce Angela, and generally existing on the slippery slopes of self-indulgence in an effort to regain his youth.

Suddenly, he is living again, his life turning to magic. At least, that's how he sees it. From our viewpoints and the viewpoints of some characters in this film, however, Les is definitely headed for some thorny territory, even as he dreams of bathing Angela in blood-red rose petals, even as he finds himself finally alone with her one ominous and rain-drenched evening. (Much of what this picture is about has to do with our own obstructed points of view in life, and how those distorting vantage points can make us not only blind to what is around us, but to ourselves as well.)

Spacey is a marvel as "ordinary guy" Burnham, making him anything but ordinary to watch as he emerges from his "sedated" state to become a man energized and engaged with life. Imagine a surrealistic mix of Dagwood Bumstead and Humbert Humbert, who remains as real and convincing as the neighbor across the street, and you'll have a bead on Spacey's character. In a movie made up of a number of powerful scenes, he's perhaps at his mesmerizing best in the noirish seduction scene opposite Mena Suvani (which is possibly the film's most painful episode to watch). Though almost every performance in "American Beauty" is remarkable, those of newcomer Wes Bentley as the anguished teen-next-door who views much of life via his video camera, and Chris Cooper as his father, a retired Marine officer practically quaking with repressed anger, are especially outstanding.

Oscar-winning director of photography, Conrad L. Hall ("Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid") and production designer, Naomi Shohan, especially enhance tone and mood in "American Beauty" via a stylized color palette of inky blacks, dreamy neutrals, and startling splashes of scarlet and crimson.

Mid-life crisis: Kevin Spacey and Annette Bening star in "American Beauty," a haunting drama directed by Sam Mendes.

No lie, 'Jakob' worth a look

BY JON KATZ
SPECIAL WRITER

The ghetto. Elvis sang about it. African-Americans struggle to get out of it. But few recall that the word, an Italian derivation, was used over a half-century ago to describe the part of a city in which Jews were required to live. It was a holding area in Nazi-occupied territories, the final stop on the way to the death camps.

Fenced in and forced into silent, heavy labor, the townspeople were forbidden all contact with the outside world. For years, they couldn't write a letter, couldn't read a newspaper, couldn't own a radio. To do so meant execution, as did a thousand other offenses. Stripped of their lives and their livelihood, many simply gave up, committing suicide to preserve what dignity they had left.

The remarkable Robin Williams proves his acting mettle in yet another envelope-pushing performance as the unremarkable Jakob Heym, a former café owner in World War II Poland who has survived by going unnoticed. Taken to the police commandant's office to be punished for a curfew violation, Jakob hears a radio report of Soviet troops only a few hundred kilometers away. He tells the news to a friend; liberation is at hand.

Soon, he is THE Jakob Heym, hero of the ghetto, the man with the secret radio. Protesting that he doesn't have such a dangerous possession, the villagers nod knowingly. "No one who owns a radio would be stupid enough to admit it," they reason. "So you must have a radio."

Pressed each day for updated reports, Jakob invents more and more elaborate war news, including tanks and a jazz band sent by the Americans. "I hear the music with the guns; is like Benny Goodman," he tells them. As a result, there are no more suicides, for Jakob has given them back what the Nazi's took away: hope.

"Jakob the Liar" is based on the book by Jurek Becker, a survivor of the camps. It is wonderful and horrifying, funny and sad, uplifting and depressing. "Never again" is the rallying cry of Jews today. But we know that the racial cleansing continues today; only the places and races have changed.

Williams is understated throughout; his Jakob is a little man who knows that to stand out is to be put in jeopardy. He is not the bombastic radio deejay of "Good Morning Vietnam." There is humor here, but it is dealt in small doses: tiny jibes at friends or a fleeting victory over a guard. Mostly there is caution; the Nazis are everywhere, as are village informants who will turn in a countryman for an extra ration of food. "Despite saying I know bubkes," Jakob laments to himself, "everyone wants information...what do I invent tomorrow?"

Shot in Poland and Budapest, "Jakob the Liar" was directed by Hungarian-born Peter Kassovitz, who as a boy saw his parents taken away and was hidden with a Catholic family. Williams is amazing, his perfect Polish/Yiddish accent and subtle changes of expression reflecting the broken dreams of the downtrodden. Other significant performances are turned in by Alah Arkin and Bob Balaban as friends, Hannah Taylor Gordon as a 10-year-old who escapes the camp-bound train and hides in Jakob's apartment, Liev Schrieber as Mischa the boxer and Armin Mueller-Stahl as the village doctor.

MUSIC

Unraveling the hip hop mystery

BY STEPHANIE ANGELYN CASOLA
STAFF WRITER
scasola@oe.homecomm.net

The success of artists like Kid Rock and Eminem has spurred an interest in Detroit musicians who can hip hop, rock and emcee their way to stardom. For the second year, those local artists will have a chance to show their stuff in front of a crowd of 2,000 in Canton.

The second annual Microphone Mystery Tour, hosted by Joe C. of Kid Rock, will be held Saturday, Oct. 2, at Center Stage in Canton. Artists performing this year include The 10, Sevant, DJ Fingers of 105.9 FM, and DJ Dez of 88.1 FM.

"It's a talent showcase for local talent," said Gary Sims of Power Move Productions. Known professionally as The 10, Sims is one organizer of the event. With his help last year, the Microphone Mystery show drew a crowd of 1,000 people with only grass-roots style publicity, mostly in the form of fliers. It's that time of year again. With help from Joe C., a Taylor resident and member of Kid Rock's band, organizers are hoping for an even bigger crowd this year.

"We try to come up with something for everyone: we've got hip hop performers ... DJ Fingers is a hot dance DJ, Dez is a hip hop DJ, Joe C. is a little rock and roll and a little hip hop."

Sims said he chose Canton as a way of bringing the music into the suburbs.

The 10

"It's a really good place for shows," he said. "A lot of suburb kids like hip hop, like dancing. I'm sure they'll like how convenient it is."

Ken Fisher, organizer of the event and owner of Richter Scale Records, said each year he looks to showcase "the hottest people locally." Since Richter Scale is based in Taylor, Fisher concentrates on hip hop acts based in an area from Southwest Detroit to Ann Arbor. Canton falls into that area. He performs under the moniker Sevant and will headline the show with his hard core, underground style. For those who anticipate a preview of the show, Sevant's EP "Dirty Rats" is available now.

Fresh from a performance with KRS-ONE, The 10 and Sevant can be seen live during the Microphone Mystery Tour show. The show aims at giving hip hop artists in the area more recognition.

"Kid Rock and Eminem had been around here for years," said Sims. "We're trying to give these guys some recognition around here."

Fisher was excited to announce a late addition to the show, DJ's Jared and Magnetic, who will do turntable tricks in a tag-team fashion. As one creates a beat using the turntable using one hand, and a constant bass line that can be slowed down or sped up with the other. His partner scratches lyrics over the top. It's bound to be a highlight this year, said Fisher.

As the Metro area hip hop scene continues to grow, Fisher sees positive and negative indications in its future.

"It's positive as well as exposing people to look at this area," he said. "But you lose the love where money's involved. I love hip hop. I've been DJing for 15 years. I've been involved since its birth. We're trying to keep the love in it. Hip hop came from one station spinning it, now it's world-wide."

As seen on TV: Local actors follow their dreams

STEPHANIE A. CASOLA

When it comes to the entertainment industry, Detroit has come a long way. Still light years from the industry forefront — namely New York and Hollywood — the Motor City has its way of weaving in and out of the spotlight, reminding the world that there's more to Michigan than just automobiles.

Last week two Michigan actors marked breakthrough performances in their careers. One has made the move to California; the other has stayed closely tied to his Michigan roots.

Hollywood or bust

Rich Hutchman was only 5 years old when he and his family moved to Livonia from Ireland. By age 10 he was delivering the Livonia Observer. He attended Franklin High School and later Kalamazoo College. "I have the warmest feelings for Livonia, there's no doubt about it," he said.

All the while Hutchman dreamed of becoming an actor. He moved to Hollywood only eight months ago and landed a guest-starring appearance on "Chicago Hope," which aired Thursday, Sept. 23. Hutchman played Robert Bacon, a character whose son was taken to the hospital because of a cleft pallet. Doctors, played by Lauren Holly and Barbara Hershey, discover the boy also has a heart condition. Both ailments must be operated on – at the same time.

Of his first big television part, Hutchman said it was a great experience. "All of the actors were really professional and nice," he said, adding that Holly and Hershey were particularly wonderful to work with. He called Hershey "such a major star."

Having lived in Chicago for seven years prior to moving to the West coast, Hutchman had a unique understanding of his character. "I have more of a feeling for the south side Chicago accent," said Hutchman. "He's a real, regular guy."

As he's continued to pursue his career, Hutchman said his family has been very supportive. "My dad would always say, 'You only get to live once. Go for your dreams.'"

And he is.

Wanting it all

It's almost as if Ed Nahhat leads two separate lives. By day he works as a general practice litigator. On his own time, the Royal Oak resident writes and acts in plays, films, industrial videos and commercials.

On Saturday afternoon, Sept. 25, cable audiences around the country had a first chance to tune into the Lifetime network and catch him in action. Nahhat scored a supporting role in the film "All of It," which was filmed in the Birmingham and Bloomfield Hills area in October 1997. The movie's writer, director and co-producer is former Bloomfield Hills resident Jody Podolsky. Darren Gold, also from Bloomfield Hills, assisted in producing, casting, and hiring a crew for "All of It."

Nahhat auditioned for a small role in the film, a restaurant manager, but the Podolsky and Gold had a "bigger part in mind" for him. One week later, he was on the set as a supporting cast member, on a project starring Academy Award nominee Lesley Ann Warren. Nahhat can't help but break a smile still thinking about it. He was most impressed with the way Podolsky approached him for the role.

"She treated me like a professional, even though I was only a local actor," he said.

The film deals with the tense relationship between a mother and daughter who lead different lives. It centers around Amy Holbeck (Alanna Urbach), a 25-year-old woman living in New York City who returns to the Oakland County suburbs to spend Yom Kippur with her family.

"It's a timeless story," said Nahhat. "Well written and honest. He plays the perfect son-in-law, married to the other daughter. "I really enjoyed playing a smart alec."

For Michigan natives, certain sites in the film will look familiar: the Franklin Cider Mill, Congregation Shaarey Zedek and Long Lake Market. There are shots taken from downtown Birmingham, Southfield and the director's Bloomfield Hills home in the film. "You'll be able to see that it's local," said Nahhat, who began acting in church plays and at Kimball High School in Royal Oak. After getting a bachelor's degree in fine arts and honing his skills at such places as the Michigan Repertory Theatre and The Attic Theater, Nahhat enrolled in law school at Wayne State University.

Ed Nahhat

While law and acting may seem quite opposite as careers go, Nahhat drew parallels between them. In law, he said, you have to "believe in your client," have "experience," and "have confidence in the presentation of ideas and emotions to a judge or jury." Those same skills benefit him as an actor before an audience.

Chances are Nahhat won't be packing up and moving to California to become a star; he's got work to do in the Metro area. More importantly, he said, his family still lives here. "My heart is sort of in this area," said Nahhat. He admires people like actor Jeff Daniels who stay true to their Michigan roots. "He's a big supporter of local talent, local artists," said Nahhat of Daniels. "I admire that kind of loyalty to hometown."

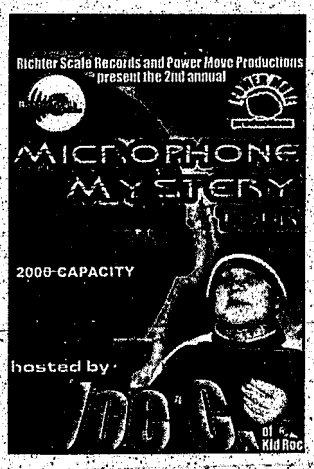

So he strikes a balance between practicing law and maintaining a creative outlet in television, theater, and now film. Look for "All of It" to be shown again on Lifetime.

who started Power Move Productions in 1995 to gain more control over his own musical career.

"We built up a small pre-production studio, released a single and a full-length album on The 10, now we're promoting concerts. Now we're a full-fledged entertainment company. Hopefully we'll be making some noise."

The 10 recently released "Heat," an album carrying a strong street buzz. Sims described The 10 as having a "hard-core street sound."

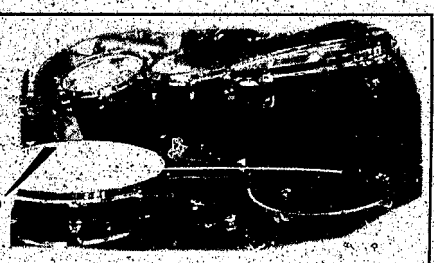

"The way it's presented, it's something everyone can relate to," said Sims, who's been in the music business for 15 years. He said he loves the way hip hop has crossed over to include other genres, like rock and roll, and other cultures.

"I have a love of music that came across time," said Sims. "No matter what happens, hip hop is like my culture, a way of life. It's not anything I can think about changing. It's not even a conscious effort."

What better way to make a living than by incorporating something you love. Sims sees the potential in creating and performing hip hop in Detroit. Just talking to people in the area, or on his Web site, he can tell, "how huge this is."

"I feel like I have something to do with that," he said. "I want to continue to make it grow."

The Second Annual Microphone Mystery Tour will be held 9 p.m. Saturday, Oct. 2, at Center Stage, 39940 Ford Road in Canton. Call (313) 438-0743 for information.

Don't miss our new play, "Sell it in three, or we'll run it for FREE!" now appearing in the Classified section of your hometown newspaper. In fact if you don't sell it with three Classified ads, we'll run your ad free three more times! Now that's worth a round of applause.

Le Metro Bistro opens 11th year with a new menu

BY ELEANOR HEALD
SPECIAL WRITER

Having celebrated its 10th anniversary in late July, Southfield's Le Metro Bistro, tucked into the northwest corner of Applegate Square, is celebrating by debuting a new menu and wine list.

Owner Tim Winterfield credits Le Metro's longevity and popularity to very loyal diners, his own hard work and daily involvement in the bistro which he aptly defines.

"A bistro kitchen takes underutilized products and makes signature, delicious, unique dishes through proper preparation, using sound French cooking techniques."

When Le Metro first opened in 1989, there were white linen tablecloths, flowers on each table and foods such as lamb chops and beef tenderloin. But Winterfield allowed his restaurant to evolve into a bistro. Today, he prefers to serve you savory short ribs, succulent braised lamb shanks with a mouth-watering sauce or savory braised breast of lamb.

Having earned a grand diploma from the world-renowned culinary school La Varenne in Paris, Winterfield does what every great chef or restaurateur does. Six days each week, he hand selects fresh produce, meat and fish from purveyors at Detroit's Eastern Market.

"Without this, we could not do what Le Metro does best," he said. "And that's fresh food, served simply, but elegantly."

Such dishes for the 60-seat eatery are ably prepared by Chef Eric Horlacher, who earned a hotel and restaurant management degree from Michigan State University in 1990. He went on to earn the grand diploma in 1992 from La Varenne.

"I enjoy cooking bistro-style food because it gives me flexibility to be creative, something the more rigid style of French cuisine does not allow," Horlacher commented.

In France, a bistro is about food, but also often about people.

A third person, general manager Rick Hoyt, contributes to the style of Le Metro. In appearance, he could easily pass for a top Paris bistro waiter. His knowledge of wines on the short, but well-assembled list is excellent. He not only knows regular diners by name, but remembers their food preferences and does not hesitate to make recommendations about daily specials.

New items on the menu include Duck Pasta, which perfectly illustrates Winterfield's "bistro utilization" concept. As an entree, he offers Pan Seared Duck Breast, but rather than paying the high price for duck breasts, he buys whole ducks and uses legs and thighs for the Duck Pasta.

Le Metro Burger has been on the menu for about three months and it's staying on the revised version. "I think this illustrates how Le Metro has evolved," Winterfield noted.

While evolving, Winterfield is listening to diners. Thus, back by popular demand, are Provimi Veal Medallions, stuffed with Boursin cheese and sun-dried tomatoes presented with fresh tomato coulis. This is a Tim Winterfield signature all the way – since his days at Detroit's Money Tree.

Retro is still in style.

"Today, you need to offer chicken breast," Winterfield added. "But we've put a new and exciting spin on it, serving it with brown rice and black-eyed pea salsa."

And for a new dose of spicy, there's Andouillle Sausage with cajun potato salad.

Le Metro Bistro's revised menu is not the only new element. Now in concept stage, Winterfield plans to convert the smoking section of his eatery to Le Metro to Go.

His ambitious plans include an eventual 300 selections. Look for this in about six months. We'll alert you on the Observer & Eccentric dining page.

Crooks better watch out

Here's how homeowners can battle crime in their own neighborhoods:

- Turn on the porch light or carriage light at night. Everyone. Every night.
- Look out for each other. Phone 9-1-1 at the first hint of suspicious activity – people, vehicles, noises, odors. Call immediately.
- Park your locked car in the locked garage overnight. At the very least, get vehicles off the street.
- Put things away.
- Trim bushes and shrubs away from windows and porches.
- Pick up papers and mail on a timely basis.
- Get to know your neighbors and neighborhood. Take walks. Inline skate. Ride your bike. Sit on the porch.
- Call the crime prevention bureau of your local police department to establish an active neighborhood watch.

Crime affects lifestyle and property values.

Neighborhood Watch, a crime-prevention program usually organized on a block-by-block basis, has a modest mission.

First, encourage folks to get to know their neighbors. Then, train people to be aware of what's happening around them and to report suspicious activity to police immediately.

Simple? Yes, police say. Effective? Another affirmative.

Officer Jeff Bero coordinates Neighborhood Watch for Redford Township.

"Through crime stats in Redford, less than 1 percent of crimes – burglaries, larcenies, stolen vehicles, those types of crimes – occur on Neighborhood Watch groups," he said.

"Not only do they know their neighbors, who should or shouldn't be in an area, but they take a proactive approach in making houses safer," Bero said. "When we take away opportunity, we deny crime. It doesn't always happen, but the majority of time it does."

Burglary and auto thefts are discussed at all Neighborhood Watch meetings in Redford. Other topics have included personal safety, drug awareness and home security surveys.

"The presence of Neighborhood Watch groups on a certain block doesn't directly relate to selling price," Bero said.

"But the presence of a group on a particular block brings down crime and, in turn, keeps (property) values high because the area is safer than an area that doesn't have Neighborhood Watch," he added.

Officer Al Gosenca helps organize Neighborhood Watch in Troy.

"The main philosophy behind Neighborhood Watch is being a good, nosy neighbor," he said. "We educate people to be the eyes and ears of the police department. We can't be everywhere."

Officer Jamie Senkbeil coordinates Neighborhood Watch in Plymouth Township.

She believes it makes a difference, but it's hard to quantify since the program is so new there (less than a year) and no one knows for sure exactly what's prevented.

Senkbeil said. "That in itself – neighbors getting to know one another – they feel better about calling when they see something suspicious."

Phil Anderlie, a Realtor with Clark & Fron in Livonia, said personal safety and crime rates are very important to prospective buyers. "But I don't find they actively look for Neighborhood Watch signs."

But crooks might, he conceded. "If you were a criminal and you were going to break into a house, would you target a house with a Neighborhood Watch sign or not?" Anderlie said.

"Neighborhood Watches are very nice for the fact neighbors look out for each other," he said. "The more involved people are, the better things are. You get to know your neighbors. Your home is protected. There's a lot more security."

Sometimes, the same folks in watch groups go beyond the role of crime prevention and get involved in other issues affecting the neighborhood.

Anderlie recalled the time his mother, a block captain, marshaled the forces to persuade the county to fill in drainage ditches on her street.

Gosenca came to the same conclusion from an unsuccessful effort to organize a Neighborhood Watch in a large Troy subdivision a few years ago.

"The lady who was very active creating interest, that's where she got people, volunteers, for other things like a neighborhood picnic, walking kids through the neighborhood on Halloween, things like that," he said.

Mary Christie has been involved in Neighborhood Watch in Plymouth for a couple of years.

"I think the big plus is the neighbors get to know one another and watch out for one another, especially in a day and age when everyone works and no one is home a lot," she said. "We also have communication. If something is happening in the neighborhood, we have a network.

"The volunteers are a wonderful group," Christie added. "If I were a potential home buyer, I would rather buy in a Neighborhood Watch area. You're not only moving into a house but moving into a community."

Melvin Howard, a block captain, has been involved in Neighborhood Watch in Redford for seven or eight years. "Working together, we can be a great help to one another," he said.

Some municipalities don't offer Neighborhood Watch.

Southfield, for instance has a volunteer citizen's mobile patrol. Canton uses a community policing concept where specific officers are assigned to specific areas to develop a presence and relationships.

But Neighborhood Watch has its place, too, other law enforcers say.

"Personally, I think it makes a difference," Gosenca said. "Neighborhood Watch is a philosophy more than anything else."

Home equity loan vs. 2nd mortgage

MORTGAGE SEARCH

DAVID C. MULLY

Part 2 of 2

In determining your actual credit line, the lender will consider your ability to repay, by looking at your income, debts and other financial obligations, as well as your credit history. If you borrow $40,000 and pay it back, you can borrow that money again.

A home equity line is a form of revolving credit in which your home serves as collateral. The money is often accessible through an account where you write checks that become a series of "mini-loans" against your equity. When you repay the "mini-loans" plus interest, you can use the equity over and over again.

Many of the costs in setting up a home equity line of credit are similar to those you pay when you buy a home: appraisal fee; application fee; closing costs such as attorney fees, title search, mortgage preparation fees, and title insurance; yearly maintenance fees; and perhaps a transaction fee every time you draw on the credit line.

Another kind of home equity loan is a second mortgage. You borrow the entire amount at once, and the payments are amortized over 15 or 20 years. You have a set payment every month.

Deciding between a line of credit or a second mortgage depends on the situation. "There are times that if you don't think you're going to reuse the money or if you're concerned about having a set monthly payment, it's better to refinance the whole thing," said G. Richard Bright, senior vice president of Countrywide Mortgage's Home Equity Lending Division." Usually the interest rate on refinancing your home is lower than the interest rate on a second mortgage loan.

On a line of credit, risks are higher for the lender, so the lender charges a higher rate. You could refinance your current mortgage at an interest rate of 7.25 to 7.5 percent versus 10 percent on a line of credit.

If you have to borrow money, one big advantage of either type of home equity loans is that the interest on them is typically tax deductible. According to Internal Revenue Service, the total home equity debt on your main home and second home is limited to the smaller of the following: $100,000 ($50,000 if married filing separately) or the total of each home's fair market value. Consult your tax adviser for your circumstances.

If you have additional questions about home equity loans where you live, you should call a lender.

REAL ESTATE QUERIES

ROBERT M. MEISNER

I own a house and land in another state. When we bought the house, there was an additional four acres behind the house that I did not buy. There is no access to the property behind the house, so an easement of 30 feet was added to the contract, on the house.

The assessor claims that the property where the easement lies belong to me. The person behind me believes that the easement belongs to him. There are trees on my property that I want to sell, but the new owner of the property behind me says the trees are his.

The assessor suggests that the people behind us have an easement in order to get to their property. My question is who does the easement belong to and if it belongs to me, how much do the people behind me have a say in what is built or put on it?

To the extent that your issue deals with out-of-state property, it will be necessary for you to consult legal counseling the state in which you are involved to determine any particular idiosyncrasies concerning that state's law regarding easements.

It would appear, however, that the neighboring property retains an easement over your land to gain access to his or her property. Generally, you cannot to anything that will impair the right of the easement holder to use the easement. However, it may be possible for you to change the course of the easement as long as it allows access to the property behind you, particularly if the easement is not clearly delineated in any type of legal description.

Obviously, it is necessary to get all the details and facts concerning this matter. If there is a dispute as to the ownership of the property, it may have to be settled in court in order to resolve any issues before the trees are removed. Settling before removing any trees avoids someone suing you for trespass.

Giffels proposes to join with ARCADIS

Giffels' Board of Directors has recommended that the private, employee-owned firm join with ARCADIS, one of the world's largest engineering firms.

The proposed purchase price wasn't disclosed.

Giffels' participation in the international ARCADIS group of companies allows the 500-person, 75-year-old architecture, engineering and planning firm to expand on a global basis and enhance its capabilities as a fully diversified, professional practice.

Giffels consists of Giffels Associates Inc. of Southfield, and Phoenix, Ariz.; Giffels Strategic Consultants LLC of Southfield; Giffels Technologies Inc. of Southfield; and Giffels Hoyem Basso of Troy.

The divisions will retain the same names, and none of the employees will lose their jobs as a result of the acquisition, said Richard Bither, P.E., Giffels president and chairman.

The joining of the companies is expected by the end of October, pending shareholder approvals.

ARCADIS, a publicly owned company, was established in the Netherlands in 1888 and currently employs more than 7,000 people. The multi-national engineering company specializes in environmental, infrastructure, construction engineering, urban and rural development, and real estate information services.

"The international experience and network of ARCADIS is an ideal complement to the planning and design services we provide to major industrial, corporate and institutional owners," Bither said.

"We are excited about our continued growth and the synergies that results from the harmonious joining of our resources, expertise, values, and culture with those of a premier global company," he said.

Giffels services the automotive OEM's, tier-1 suppliers, major manufacturing corporations, governmental, educational and healthcare clients along with multi-national Fortune 500 Corporations.

The combined operational units of Giffels have completed projects with a construction value of nearly $1 billion annually.
