CLARKSTON, MICHIGAN FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1933

WHOLE NUMBER 181

Villagers Sign School Petitions

Enthusiastic response here to petitions requesting the State Legislature to relieve home and farm property of taxation for the support of the public schools, and to adopt other taxes for school revenue, was reported.

Sponsored by the M. E. A., the petitions were sponsored throughout the state by the Michigan Education Association and the Congress of Parent-Teacher Associations.

The petitions written with the fact in mind that the voters of Michigan last fall decided to limit the tax on real property to $15 per thousand of assessed valuation for all purposes except debts previously incurred, endorse "the principle of raising future revenue for the support of the state government and public education by means of such taxes as the inheritance and gift taxes, the graduated income tax, truck and bus tax, or any other tax which may be feasible, except a property tax."

They also ask for a reduction in the operating costs of the public schools to a level set by the year 1922-23, when the per pupil cost per year was $68.18 throughout the state. The per pupil cost in 1930-31 was $89.13.

The public schools of Michigan will all be in grave danger of not being able to re-open after they close next June unless the Legislature provides a new source of revenue for them. The recommendations of this petition would not only protect homes and farms from over-burdensome property taxation, but would ward off the terrible calamity that would be brought about if the public schools were forced to close.

New Manufacturing Plant Starts at Grayling

Manufacturing the New "Air Lock Log" for Building Construction

The National Log Construction Company of Grayling, Michigan, has purchased the former plant of the Grayling Box Company, and have completed the installation of special machinery for the manufacture of the new "Air Lock Log", which is designed to revolutionize the construction of log buildings. Patent applications are on file at Washington covering this type of construction, and actual patent grant is expected in the near future.

Log structures have been exceedingly popular in the past notwithstanding the fact that many undesirable features are connected with present type log construction. The costs have equalled or exceeded brick construction, the upkeep has been excessive due to open checks appearing in the logs, which if not sealed, allows rain and moisture to get to the heart of the logs and eventually cause log rot. The inability to properly season logs prior to their use in construction, causes shrinkage which forces out the plaster or chinking between logs, necessitating constant replacement.

The new "Air Lock Log" is designed to eliminate these many undesirable features of present day log construction. Rough logs in the round are put in large wood lathes, which removes the bark and cuts into the wood sufficient to eliminate the taper and bring out the natural grain of the wood. Next the heart of the logs are bored out their entire length, through use of special machinery — size of bore depending on the outside diameter of the logs. The logs are then stored for proper seasoning at which time they go through another special machine that cuts in one operation, a longitudinal tongue on one side and a groove on the other — sides of the tongue and groove being tapered five degrees so as to insure a snug fit when engaged.

On special orders, the logs are then cut to fit the structure they are intended for which includes cutting logs to proper length, mitering of log ends for right angle turns, grooving log ends to permit their being jointed together firmly or for fitting them around window and door frames and dado cuts where lap corners are desired. Special machinery is now being installed for making log windows and door frames, as well as log doors, window boxes and log fences which will harmonize with a log built home.

The advantages claimed for this type of log construction are, (a) cutting costs of present type log structures about 40%, making it possible to build at frame construction costs; (b) eliminating checks in the logs with the resulting log rot, by boring the heart out, thus allowing the logs to season equally inside as well as out; (c) the structure is made weather tight through the engaging of the tongue and groove which is sealed with a special waterproof glue, making such structures suitable for both winter and summer occupancy; (d) boring of the logs, gives a dead air space in wall construction which acts as insulation against both heat and cold, and incidentally provides a space to conceal all wiring and plumbing; (e) the bore through the heart of the logs is small enough so that its strength is not decreased, yet is the means of cutting fully in half the cost of rail delivery; (f) cutting into the log surface sufficiently deep to not only remove the bark, but to bring out the natural grain of the wood, provides a much more attractive surface on which can be used various stains, dull or gloss varnishes; (g) construction is such that any or all rooms may be plastered if desired. The company is now experimenting with a means of fire-proofing their logs.

On file at the company offices at Grayling are orders for permanent homes to be erected in various cities and villages of this State, which makes it appear that log structures are going metropolitan. Model designs are now being perfected on all types of buildings including permanent homes, golf hunting and fishing club houses, summer homes and cottages, over night cabins, bar-becue stands, and ornamental gasoline and service stations.

The Wilson Lake Serpent

By John E. Hunsinger

Many are the lakes of northwestern Oakland that have lost their original names of Indian lore, and bear names now that are more in line with descriptive definition. How lake Pequinot became changed to Wilson lake is not upon accessible record and the writer is unable to locate data on this subject.

However, such is not important or essential to the story connected therewith, for the lake was there before the red man came to give it its name.

All the lakes in upper Oakland bear evidence this day that Indians had chosen their shores for habitation and lake Pequinot is no exception. This peaceful body of water is fed by the Shiawassee. I say peaceful — but given cause of a certain kind, and it becomes angry. Woe to the brave who dared to venture upon its bosom when in the mood of evil spirits, for its bottom is lined with canoes, whose history is closed to present generation.

Life along the shores of lake Erie became unbearable because of frequent incursions of wandering tribes of Uncas, Chickasaws and Catapas; the peaceful settlement of a lone tribe of Chippewas at St. Dusky suffered great loss at these times, for on these evil days, they lost their corn, horses, cattle, cured fish and all stores that were to carry them over winter. The country was in continuous turmoil and many battles became fought along the shore, as far west as the Miami.

The Chippewas and Ottawas were friendly; the latter would permit the Chippewas to pass through their lands when they wanted to go westward to settle upon new location.

A family of thirty members of this tribe came as far as Fort Maumee and friendly hands conveyed them across the stream. From thence on, the Chippewas turned in a north-westerly direction, finding upon a lake that was free and clear of habitation and whose nearest settlement was what is now called Long Lake. By settlement, I do not imply white settlers, but a lodge of considerable size of Red Men.

Information gained from friendly tribes of this neighborhood gave the newcomers the name of the water as Lake Pequinot and while many other tribes had claimed its shores as their camping ground, such however became abandoned through causes over which the Indian had not control.

Tradition had it that the vicinity of Lake Pequinot was haunted; that the lake itself was but a net into whose meshes the victims were lured and then dipped out of physical existence.

Of course, the new settlers heard these stories of why the location had not been taken permanently by other tribes; yet they would be convinced before surrendering their newly acquired right of possession.

The party of Chippewas consisted of thirty members, divided into eight families. The oldest members were Patuk and his squaw, while four of their sons had taken unto themselves squaws. Two daughters, both married, had their own tepees and between the six offspring of the Patuks there were fourteen paposes. To this tribe became attached a French Canadian, that had married a near relative of squaw Patuk. The Frenchman's name was Joe Gros-bouche, and though his facial features did not correspond with his name, nevertheless he made it up with versatility.

The surrounding territory was well stocked with game and the waters of Pequinot lake contained a nearly inexhaustible supply of fish, such as mashkinoje up to thirty pounds and of course several larger ones that Joe Grosbouche had hooked that got away.

The tepees were strewn on the west side of the lake, permitting of easy access and a strip of cleared land for planting. Thus the tribe lived in peace and comfort for nearly a year without seeing the prophesied Spectre; but it was there and only awaited favorable time for its appearance.

One day, a squaw noticed something floating in the lake. Evidently it had come from the mouth of the Shiawassee and pursued a south-westerly direction. Most all of the manhood was out on the chase, but lusty calls brought out Joe Grosbouche. He surmised it to be a waterlogged canoe, or a floating tree. It was best for him to investigate and make sure, for as he had often proclaimed, he feared neither the devil or his satellites.

He jumped into the nearest skiff and paddled out toward the center of the lake. Hardly had he consumed one-third the way, when the floating object turned to meet him. Joe saw that the object made better time than his own craft, so he turned and made back for shore. Once fouching terra firma, he ran up the slope as fast as his feet could take him. He had not time to pull his canoe far upshore; but this bothered him little, for he was mainly concerned for his own safety.

When he became assured of his existence among the living, he stopped to see whether the object was following him. It did not; yet, to his consternation, his canoe was washed out of its anchorage and the water near shore became very turbulent.

Regular meeting of the Boy Scouts was Monday, January 30, 1933. The first part of the meeting was devoted to making jig-saw puzzles. Being short of lumber we didn't get many of them finished. They are supposed to be finished by next meeting. We will display them when we have our parents' night.

The Scout registration cards are here. We have 12 registered Scouts and 8 more to be sent in soon. Next meeting we will start planning and rehearsing for parents' night which will be soon. We have a good program and wish that there will be a large crowd. It will do the boys as much good as it will the parents, to see that somebody is interested in what they are doing.

Clarkston Graduates Make Fine Record

Recently Mr. Winn received a list of the marks earned by the four Clarkston High School graduates who entered the Michigan State Normal College as freshmen last fall. The marks are as follows:

Betty Huntly, 2 A's and 2 B's; Virginia Clark, 1 A, 2 B's, and 1 C; Mary Miller, 4 B's; Lawrence Grate, 4 C's.

C is the average mark while D and E are below average and A and B are given for superior work.

Lawrence Grate took courses in both Physics and Chemistry and worked to defray all of his own expenses. Mary Miller and Virginia Clark worked for both board and room and Betty Huntly worked to defray a part of her expenses. The three girls are taking home economics courses.

The standards of work required at the Normal College are very high as evidenced by the fact that the Normal College at Ypsilanti is considered the best in the United States. Out of nearly a thousand Freshmen only three received all A grades.

The school and the community may well feel proud of the record made by these young people.

Homemaker's Own Corner

What has happened to the housewives of America? Four years ago we talked in terms of dollars. Today we count our pennies.

John's salary has been cut to the bone, and Tom works only three days a week at wages he would have scorned in 1928.

As a general rule, the women of America hold the purse strings, and they have had to do some real thinking, to make the salaries stretch over the necessities.

When it is necessary to economize the first thing a woman naturally thinks of is food.

She watches the markets now, buying cautiously. There is no hazard buying today, ordering promiscuously anything that appeals to the eye and taste, regardless of price.

Have you been taking advantage of the abundant supply of eggs and their extremely low price?

By all means, build at least one meal a day around an egg dish. And make that angel-food cake that you have wanted to make for such a long time and felt you couldn't afford.

There are many, many ways of serving eggs besides boiling, poaching, scrambling and frying.

A puffy omelet served with a Spanish sauce is delicious. The Spanish sauce is made as follows:

- 1 tablespoon fat.
- 1 tablespoon chopped green pepper
- 1/4 teaspoon celery salt
- 3 cups chopped mushrooms
- 1 teaspoon chopped onion
- 1 teaspoon flour
- 1/4 teaspoon salt
- 1 cup tomatoes

Melt the fat, add green peppers and mushrooms. Cook slowly for three minutes; add flour and seasonings. Mix well. Add the tomatoes and simmer gently until thick.

Creamed Eggs with Shrimps

- 2 tablespoons fat
- 3 tablespoons flour
- 1/4 teaspoon paprika
- 1/4 teaspoon salt
- 1/2 teaspoon prepared mustard
- 1 cup thin cream
- 1/2 cup milk
- 6 hard-cooked eggs
- 1 small can shrimps
- 6 rounds toast

Melt fat, browning slowly. Add flour and seasonings, stirring until mixture is well blended. Pour in cream and milk, gradually stirring until smooth and thickened. Chop eggs coarsely, remove viscera from the shrimps and cut in halves. Turn into the white sauce. When heated, serve on rounds of buttered toast. Garnish with parsley.

Pressed Eggs

- 6 hard-cooked eggs
- 1 small onion
- 2 tablespoons chopped green pepper
- 2 tablespoons stock
- 1/2 teaspoon salt
- 1 tablespoon prepared mustard
- 1/4 cups chopped ham
- Chop fine hard-cooked eggs, onion and green pepper. Mix together with salt and prepared mustard. Place half the mixture in a small greased loaf pan. Press down, then add a layer of ham, chopped. Finish with egg mixture. Pour over it the stock to help bind it together and press down well.

Keep in the refrigerator until molded well enough to slice. Serve in place of cold meat or use as sandwich filling.

A Sprinkle of Salt

The savour of the soup is often a mere matter of salt, I have discovered, and as a saver of labor the salt shaker has proved itself a faithful friend. A pinch of salt adds savour to a cake, taking away the flat taste.

A little salt improves the flavor of cocoa and brings out the delicious taste in fudge.

Salt is a great assistant in cleaning. If soot has fallen on hearth or floor it can be cleaned up without a smudge if salt is dropped over it and the dirt is swept up immediately.

Vinegar and salt make a magic cleanser for enamel ware and for brass as well as removing lime deposits from glass ware.

A teaspoon of salt in the coal oil lamp makes a clearer and cleaner blaze.

Salting the starch on wash day in wintertime means that the starch will not be frozen out of the clean clothes. The iron takes on a new zip when it is rubbed over salt on ironing day.

Three year old Catherine's mother and father were away for the evening and grandfather put her to bed. The next day she was telling her mother all about it. "Mother," she said, "Granddaddy undressed me, and brushed my teeth, and heard my prayers, and got me a drink of water and told me a story and after that I didn't hear a whimper out of him all night."

Learning Love's Lesson

What am I doing the whole day through?
Oh, I can find plenty for my hands to do,
Washing the dishes or scrubbing the floors,
My little man helping with myriads of chores,
Sewing on buttons or mending a waist,
Or cutting wee trousers to sew and baste,
Telling a story or tucking in bed,
A tired little man after prayers are said.

Oh, I can find plenty for my hands to do,
From mending a toy to buttoning a shoe,
Learning love's lesson in labor sweet,
These are the things that make life complete.

Bertha Clark Gibson.

Several squaws interested in the affair saw the craft disappear beneath the surface and even the object itself had taken leave from vision. The Patuk hunters returned one by one and Joe Grosbouché had to repeat his story so often that the last account did not jibe with the actual occurrence. In fact, he actually engaged in battle with a "beeg-feesh" twice as long as the canoe.

Of course, the woman folk and paposes became terror stricken while the braves formed their own opinions, but remained alert to future developments.

Tradition, brought from the Lake Erie region recorded that a sea serpent had been seen, that it had attacked fishing craft, swamped the boats by furious lashes and then consumed the fishermen. The entrance to St. Dusky bay was considered its favorite lay and seldom could one find a fisherman upon that location. But Lake Erie was a large body of water, though not very deep, Lake Pequot was but a small inland lake, yet what it lacked in dimension, it made up in depth.

Neighboring tribes were not surprised to hear of the Amphibian's appearance, if it was such. They were more surprised by its belated come back, for no one had seen it for a period of several years.

The outlet of Lake Pequot at the southwest end was rather shallow, and then spread out into many flats that extended westwards for many miles. A light canoe could navigate these waters, so now they became the favorite fishing ground, while Lake Pequot was abandoned for the time.

Evidence came to hand that the sea monster sojourned in the depth of the lake, for many times the waters became churned without apparent cause.

To Joe Grosbouché, the serpent became larger as time went on and his exaggerations became recognized by the Patuks; the only actual proof of the sea monster's appearance was attested by several squaws that had witnessed its performance and their stories varied but little.

Fishing through the ice in winter apparently defied the sea monster; yet many set lines became snapped in tow during the nights that they were left out. But such might have been caused by maskinonge that became hooked and then made a furious lunge to free themselves.

Again, once a brave bobbed his handline when a jerk snapped it from his hand and nearly severed a finger.

Spring came on; the water of the Shiawassee became murky and so did Lake Pequot. The Patuks were busy stirring up the ground for their maize planting, braves and squaws sharing the labor equally. Game at this season was poor, for winter only sustained life; though bear that had hibernated now ventured forth and began to feed. They offered meat with little fat attached to it. Then again, the bear's pelt was in its prime and a bear hide commanded from four to six deer skins and two fully matured bear hides would purchase a pony.

The Patuks now began to accumulate a little courage; Joe Grosbouché's serpent began to grow smaller within their minds, though it had grown to the full length of the lake in the mental estimation of Joe.

ful method to meet his master. Joe recognized the back of the monster, for it was the very thing that chased him. "Look out! Maybe it has feet," he kept warning. The Patuks, more calm than the half breed, paid little attention to him. They brought the monster to shore and then shortened their distance cautiously between themselves and their prize. The pointed pole would not enter the body of the captive, but one brave stepped forward and stopped the agony of the monster with a couple of well directed blows of the stone hammer.

The prize was recognized as a patriarch sturgeon. He was nearly as long as a short canoe and it took two strong men to carry him upon two saplings to the lodge.

Yes, old man Patuk had caught many sturgeon down at St. Dusky, but not half as large as this landlocked specimen. The fish had rolled upon the hooks, became entangled, and this had led to his capture.

Three Million and a Half of Names

Added to Uncle Sam's Income Tax Roll by New Law Now in Effect

When congress last June passed a new revenue act in the endeavor to balance the budget, it made subject to its income tax provisions an additional number of persons estimated at three millions and a half. A realization of this fact is brought home by the appearance in the press of information relating to the payment of income taxes.

There are two kinds of forms on which personal income tax returns are made, and it is important that you use the proper one. Form 100-A a single sheet blank, is for reporting net incomes of not more than $5,000. Form 1040, a larger folded blank, is for net incomes of more

Advocate Many Ways To Help Conditions

Ideas advanced by farmers for the improvement of agricultural conditions which were presented at meetings during Farmers Week included price fixation, non-interference with governmental functions, harder work at home, better loan facilities, decreased taxation, improved grading of products, regulation of trucking, and dozens of other remedies.

Practices advocated by N. P. Beebe, Niles, were sale of quality goods, use of an attractive package, and the employment of good salesmanship. Mr. Beebe grows the largest amount of vegetables on muck soil of any middle-western farmer and his ideas apply more particularly to truck crops.

Ernest A. Reubs, Calédonia, said, "Farm efficiency has never as much as scratched the surface. We still work much as our fathers and grandfathers did. There are a lot of extra things to do to raise that extra money we need for our taxes, but, to do this, we must start at home instead of trying to run the government."

G. S. Felt, Sparta, urged the farmers to improve the quality of their soil to reduce the per bushel cost of producing crops. Mr. Felt explained how he had built up a run down farm by the use of green manures and the keeping of livestock through which the produce of the farm could be marketed.

A round robin discussion by growers of regulated harvests for beets brought forth an array of conflicting opinions about the proper time to pull beets and the proper way to pile them. The dispute was unsettled but the growers participating were somewhat cheered by the prediction by C. R. Oviatt, crops specialist, M. S. C., that higher prices are on the way.

New Sheriff Intends To Fulfill Pledge

When Roy Reynolds was a candidate last fall for the office of sheriff of Oakland County, he pledged that if he were elected, he would give honest law enforcement.

His activities during his first month in office indicate that he intends to fulfill that pledge. Slot machines disappeared as soon as he took office. There were only four in the village of Holly, and as soon as the business men were requested to remove them, they did so without any trouble at all.

Walter Arnold continues as deputy under Sheriff Reynolds. In accordance with instructions from headquarters, he notified all blind pigs known to be operating that they would not be tolerated. Several closed on receipt of the notice. The sheriff was in the community last Saturday, warning those that had not closed that unless they took the warning, the officers would close them by using an ax on their places.

The ax of the law has been used already in other parts of the county and the sheriff evidently means business.

Fishing was indulged in frequently and supplied the lodge with ample sustenance. Any surplus was dried, smoked or otherwise cured, to be stored until such time as the fresh article became scarce. Large, fat mollusks or fresh water clams were found at the mouth of the Shiawassee and these clams served as bait for maskinonge when small fish became scarce. The Patuks would dig these mollusks in the afternoon and store them till the following morning when six to eight canoes made for the favorite fishing ground and their occupants began to bob their lines. Of course, some one in the canoe kept the craft moving, while the other kept the bait in motion.

The seamanster must have been asleep, for nothing occurred to attest to its wakefulness and fishing was good. Patriarchal pike were lifted into the craft every few minutes and the maskinonge would follow the bait for several hundred feet, and then make a grab for it, for fear that the tid-bit would land in some other fish's mouth and become lost.

The fear of the sea-serpent became well near relegated to history. Landlines, extending out into the lake for a hundred feet became set with the land end of the line fastened to a sapling top. By these means, one could tell whether a fish was snared by the bend and swaying of the small tree.

One morning an early riser gave the war whoop. Every brave sprang toward the alarmist to inquire the cause of the reveille. He pointed his finger toward the west end of the lake and there beheld, the saplings bent nearly double and swayed many feet. Bows and arrows, stone mallets, long poles with sharp points, all were ratched as if the enemy had been a human being. Caution and precaution pervaded through the Patuk tribe; they ventured no closer than the bending saplings, took hold of the lines and began to pull.

"She come one foot! She come two foot!" shouted Joe Grosbouché, all the while scanning the ground behind him in case the captured serpent should come upon shore to give chase to his persecutors.

Now the serpent rose to the surface, for he had chosen a less painful method to meet his master. Joe recognized the back of the monster, for it was the very thing that chased him. "Look out! Maybe it has feet," he kept warning. The Patuks, more calm than the half breed, paid little attention to him. They brought the monster to shore and then shortened their distance cautiously between themselves and their prize. The pointed pole would not enter the body of the captive, but one brave stepped forward and stopped the agony of the monster with a couple of well directed blows of the stone hammer.

The prize was recognized as a patriarch sturgeon. He was nearly as long as a short canoe and it took two strong men to carry him upon two saplings to the lodge.

Yes, old man Patuk had caught many sturgeon down at St. Dusky, but not half as large as this landlocked specimen. The fish had rolled upon the hooks, became entangled, and this had led to his capture.

Under the law the exemption for married men and heads of families has been decreased from $3500 to $2500, the exemption for single persons is reduced from $1500 to $1000 and the 25 per cent reduction allowed on "earned incomes" has been entirely eliminated. The tax rate is 4 per cent on the first $4,000 above exemption and 8 per cent on the remainder. The exemption allowed on each child or dependent is $400.

Income tax return blanks are being mailed by the internal revenue collectors to those persons who paid a federal tax last year, but the three millions and a half who are paying the tax the first time must apply for their own. Failure to do so is punishable by added penalty, fine or imprisonment.

FARMERS WEEK HAS LARGE ATTENDANCE

Honors won through election to office in rural organizations, through the exhibit of prize winning farm products, or through the display of personal skill in contests brought prominence to hundreds of Michigan citizens at Farmers Week, which ended February 3 at Michigan State College.

Nearly every community in Michigan shared in the honors, although the districts nearest East Lansing made the heaviest contributions to the attendance, which was probably the largest in Farmers Week history. Nine thousand people attended the Thursday night feature program and 6,000 saw a similar list of events the preceding night.
