COMMENT AND CRITICISM

First we hear about the gold standard. Then we hear about the silver standard, platform or store front. Anyway before the president called in all silver, Guy A. Walter, J. H. Alger and Gerald L. O'Dell painted what looks like a silver front on their respective stores. It's going to be hard, boys, if they call in silver and you have to scrape off that paint.

Clarkston has a police department. About every so often we like to remind everyone of this fact. A call to central will put you in touch with him most any time of night. And Floyd trying to give the village his best, has largely at his own expense installed a police radio in his car. All of which will explain the efficiency of our department in the case of a Dillinger scare, such as we had last Saturday. Note to Dillinger: This is no invitation to visit us.

To any such and such who visits our swimming holes this summer, PLEASE do not throw empty bottles in the water and then throw stones to see if you can break the bottles. You probably can, so we will take your word for it. Why leave broken bottles for bathers to cut themselves on when they go into the water? Take this pleasant warning or beware of the big, bad, Judge Morley—and can he be hard.

In a city of 4,000, each year, one person dies and 33 are injured, from automobile accidents. The average cost is: 1 complete funeral, $500.00; medical bills, 34 people, $2,000; loss of wages; 33 people, $1,500; cost of repairing cars, $2,000; attorney bills, lawsuits, $2,000; judgments in excess cost, $4,000; total, $12,000 PER YEAR. Figuring 1 car for each 5 people the average yearly cost would be $15.00. This is practically what automobile insurance protecting you against such claims and complying with the state law would cost. Why take chances of losing thousands, when the average cost is the same as carrying insurance, especially when you may lose plenty and not be able to drive your car besides?

In Memoriam

WE are so selfish about death. We count our grief. Far more than we consider their relief, Whom the great Reaper gathers in the sheaf, No more to know the season's constant change; And we forget that it means only life, Life with all joy, peace, rest and glory rife, The victory won, and ended all the strife, And Heaven no longer far away and strange.

—Bishop William Crosswell Doane.

ELMER F. BARNES TAKEN BY DEATH

Former Waterford Resident Succumbs After Long Illness

Elmer F. Barnes, who had served for years as a deputy in Judge Frank L. Covert's division of circuit court, died last Sunday at his home in Pontiac, after an illness of 11 months. He had been a court deputy for 19 years. Prior to that he was engaged in general farming at Waterford.

Mr. Barnes was taken ill with rheumatism and had been confined to his bed for quite some time.

Born in Saginaw county 68 years ago, Mr. Barnes was the son of Lorenzo Dow Barnes and of Sarah Dickman Barnes. He was married to Emma M. Hangge who survives with one daughter, Mrs. Ethel M. Shaughnessy of Clarkston. Bert Barnes of Pontiac is a half brother. Mr. Barnes had lived in the county for 56 years and during that time made his home in Waterford Township. The family moved to Pontiac when Mr. Barnes was taken ill.

Mr. Barnes was a familiar figure about the Court House, and because he was congenial and accommodating in all his official duties he was respected by all who knew him.

The body remained at the family residence until Tuesday afternoon when the funeral was held at 2:00 p. m. with burial in Oak Hill Cemetery. Rev. H. A. Huey of Waterford officiated.

All of the circuit courts were closed Tuesday afternoon out of respect to Mr. Barnes.

Mrs. Wilbur Received Some Burns

About 6:50 o'clock on Wednesday evening fire from an undetermined cause broke out in the home of Mrs. Marie Wilbur, on Buffalo street, just south of the Justice Court of Justice Morley.

The local department promptly responded to the fire call as did about 150 citizens. The attention of Howard Newbanks was attracted by Mrs. Wilbur's call for help and the fire call was turned in by Howard.

Damage was limited to around $300 and was partly covered by insurance.

One or two of the fire-fighters were caught on the roof and were drenched by the other fire fighters before they could leave their place.

This is the first fire that Clarkston has had in some time and the citizens should be thankful that the local department was successful in keeping the damage to the small loss that was sustained.

Honor the Dead, Serve the Living

The Bright Red Poppies on Sale Saturday Tell a Story

Every good American who remembers the services of the men who died in the World War and who has any feeling in his heart for the men who came back from the war, disabled, will buy and wear an American Legion and Auxiliary poppy on Saturday, May 26. Wearing the poppy is the way in which we can all honor the war dead and help the war's living victims. The little red flower is an individual tribute and each has been made individually by a disabled veteran.

Each poppy has a story of its own. The flowers are not machine made but each has been shaped by the hands of some disabled man in a government hospital or one of the convalescent workshops maintained by the Auxiliary. Look at your poppy when you buy it. Examine it. See how it is made and think for a moment of the story behind it.

Perhaps your poppy will be one of those made by a paralyzed veteran in one of the big government hospitals. This man has been confined to his bed for a number of years and probably will never leave it until he goes to his final resting place. He cannot move the lower part of his body, but his fingers fashion poppies with amazing skill. Poppy making fills many long tedious hours for him and gives him the feeling that he is a man again, earning money for useful work.

Your poppy may be one of the hundred made by a veteran who worked steadily on the flowers as he lay waiting for a very dangerous operation. The night before the operation he worked as late as he was allowed, finishing as many poppies as possible, so that in case the operation was unsuccessful there would be the poppy money to send to his destitute family at home.

Again your poppy may be one from the hands of a young farmer under treatment following a nervous breakdown. Like thousands of men in the service, this man could not stand the strain of war, but like many others, his breakdown did not come until a number of years after the war. Because he held up bravely until after the time set by the government for connecting disability with service, he could not get compensation and when he was finally forced to go to the hospital his wife and two children were left on the farm without support. Money earned by making poppies enabled him to support his family and have his farm during the long period of hospital treatment.

Perhaps the poppy you wear will not be the product of a single disabled man, but will come from one of the "Poppy Corporations" organized by the very badly disabled. The veterans who are too badly disabled to make the completed poppy by themselves, band together in groups of two, three or four and together turn out the flowers. In one hospital where a typical "Poppy Corporation" was working, a blinded man began the flowers, doing the operations he could without eyesight, another veteran with a shattered hand then took the flowers and carried the work as far as he could, after which a third man finished the flowers. The earnings were divided among the three and they were able to make almost as much as the able man.

Think of these men Saturday when you buy your poppy. Bright red crepe paper poppies. Symbol of the flowers that grew amidst the strife and smoke of battle. Blooming there each day anew.

Only plain red paper flowers. Yet, a wonderful story they tell. Of courage, zeal and valor. Love and devotion as well.

Frail and tender paper blossoms. Made by hands that still fight on. Though the guns have long ceased firing. And the years have come and gone.

So these blood red paper poppies bloom in memory of those who sleep in green narrow beds with white crosses. Our faith with them we must keep.

Methodists Worship With Baptists

What a wonderful spirit of congeniality exists in the village of Clarkston. Next Sunday morning the Methodists will dispense with their morning service and will attend the Baptist church where they will hold a memorial service. The American Legion and Legion Auxiliary together with all ex-service men will attend. Everyone in the community is invited.

As dependable as your electric light—

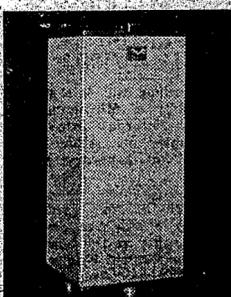

ELECTRIC HOT WATER!

Snap the switch on the wall of your room—and instantly you have a flood of light, furnished by electricity. This is so commonplace an occurrence that everyone takes it for granted. "As dependable as electric light" really means dependable. That is why the newest electrical convenience for your home—electric HOT WATER—can be described in no better way. For it too is absolutely dependable—as clean and convenient and modern as electric light.

An ample supply of hot water is essential for health, the year 'round. Your family requires as much hot water in summer as in winter. Summer weather brings a demand for cooling and refreshing baths, for invigorating showers, for countless daily uses. At no other time is warm water more appreciated... and your furnace no longer supplies this needed convenience. Are you obliged to heat water on the stove, or run up and down stairs to light a manually-operated tank? End this annoyance and waste of time—install automatic hot water service in your home! An electric heater assures you an abundant and constant supply of water, steaming hot, day or night at a turn of the faucet. You have hot water instantly when you want it—for bath and for shower, for shaving, for washing dishes, for the laundry, for housecleaning and a dozen daily tasks.

A new low rate is being offered for water heating. This is a flat annual rate for year 'round service. You can enjoy automatic electric hot water service for as little as $2.34 a month. You may buy or rent an electric water heater, whichever you choose. Rental rates are low, and if you prefer to buy the heater, convenient monthly terms may be arranged.

Gowned in stylish but appropriate clothes, light hearted and happy, she was nevertheless a New Englander at heart and while she busied herself with things to add to their comfort, she looked far into the future, ascertaining values with a shrewdness that would have done credit to brother John back home.

As her visit was nearing an end, she surprised them one evening by asking Henry if he would like to sell. Surely she was in earnest! She had never invested Grandfather Parker's savings, she was doing well in the city, and beside she owed a debt of gratitude to a person whom she was very sure would like to live there. Things were going well at the grocery, Henry must enlarge it to care for the now fast incoming population and already there were chances to sell lots of the other farm right in the heart of Clairfield for other ventures in business, and this was much more to his liking than farming.

Almeda's short city life had been a good school of experience so she made short work of retaining the proper persons to arrange the transfer, money and other details.

Then when it was all completed she quietly asked John for a dollar, saying:

"Make out a new deed to John Bingham." And turning to John added, "This is only the interest on your savings you so generously gave me years ago. This is small return on the investment. Send for Clarissa and make her a home. I'll make you a loan to get started."

He had wondered how he could ever let Almeda go, but now his mind was all in a daze and the time flew until the train pulled out and he made his way home.

Home! Now a magic word! His home, and the shack became a palace, the wild land an estate, and the plodding work horses were prancing steeds.

No wonder his hand trembled as he carefully penned a letter that night to Clarissa, telling her of his good fortune and begging her to set an early date.

Would she come the following spring? There was plenty of work now and he still had some of his savings to send her.

Summer, autumn and winter flew by and the dream came true, aided by the will and might of a young farmer who ceased work only when darkness mercifully set in to stop him.

Almeda must have had him constantly in mind for she saw many things in the city to send to the farm. Sturdy shrubs and fruit trees; flowers to border a pathway as in the old home; dishes, and a shiny new cook stove. One box after another came until John decided to add a small lean-to for a bedroom and more windows. Henry found time for bookshelves, a clock shelf and a footstool that opened into a sewing box.

Chapter VI

Spring came and the sun never shone any brighter than on the day when John, accompanied by his faithful friend Henry, awaited for Clarissa, and there never could be a fairer, daintier bride. The minister was waiting and so was the home John had so lovingly prepared for her.

There were plenty of lonely days in this strange new country with loved ones so far away, but never once in the years to come did they regret casting their lot in this new land, nor did they cease to "love, honor and obey."

To be sure they had worries and disappointments, rainy seasons that threatened to drown out the crops and droughts when the blazing sun seemed to bake the very earth. But they had the faith of a long line of God fearing, God loving forefathers who knew that seed time and harvest had been promised, and too, they had the dreams of youth.

A wonderful day came when, after hours of heartbreaking waiting, they were the parents of a baby boy. John Jr. was everything that a baby should be but their happiness was short for the tiny flower faded in the mercilessly hot days of summer and a little grave and memories were all that was left to them.

The days, now so empty, passed by all too slowly and although the gods of fortune seemed to try to repay them with bounteous crops, it brought no happiness to them.

Almeda came to cheer them with one of her now far too short visits, and carried them in thought to the lands across the sea which she visited now, just as she and John had planned so many years ago. Only now her trips were business ventures for fine laces and bits of old world textures to please the exacting patrons of her popular dress shop. The dream had come true and she was a great designer.

John and Clarissa had dreams, too, of happiness to come and when a baby girl arrived, their joy was unbounded. Like a precious pearl, she seemed an angel loaned to fill their empty hearts. John favored a good old-fashioned name but Clarissa had been quite influenced by much reading of stories in the current magazines which Almeda sent continually to the farm, and begged to call her Eleanor Almeda, which she was duly christened, and shortened by John to "Nelly."

Perhaps she was just a normal child in ideal surroundings and reflected that which she came in daily contact with; or perhaps it was that she descended on both sides from a long line of Godfearing, upright forefathers, and could not help being aught but a dutiful, obedient child. Certain it was she inherited grace and daintiness from her French ancestors and even as a little girl wore the much beruffled and lace trimmed dresses which Aunt Almeda showered upon her with a decided "air," and Aunt Almeda's only regret was that she did not live nearer that she might lavish more attention on her little namesake.

Birthdays passed by with alarming swiftness and the baby started to school and the schoolgirl was growing up, still unspoiled, and taking music and playing the hymns in the Sunday School, for the Bingham family were always regular attendants at church in the town that had steadily grown, driving the two and one-half miles in all seasons and strictly rendering their tithes on the altar.

Nelly was a girl of fourteen when her father and mother were called to the city by the sad news that Aunt Almeda had been seriously injured in an accident. After what seemed an eternity of waiting to Nelly, the sad news came that while she would live, she might never walk again and as soon as she could leave the hospital, would come to live with them.

Later, in the care of a nurse, she was welcomed to their home, but they were sad indeed at the sight of their beloved aunt, always so gay and spirited and happy, now so helpless.

Nelly spent many hours at the side of her aunt's chair and was a constant source of happiness to her while Aunt Almeda unthinkingly taught her much that would be of untold value to her in the coming years. In fact, they all gathered close to her as she relived happy days and told them tales of trips as thrilling as those Captain Parker had told to her in the long ago days.

It was a great event one day when Aunt Almeda allowed Nelly to unpack the plump pillow form she had brought from Brittany on one of her trips and Nelly sat for hours absorbed in plying the shuttles, tying the knots and watching the delicate web of lace creep slowly but surely over the side of the pillow. Then at times she would search in the little nail studded, scarlet, leather trunk for a gaily embroidered skirt or bodice and array herself while Aunt Almeda told her of the famous lace makers of the old world.

But Nelly's days were not all spent in lace making and dreaming of lands far away, for with her father one of the foremost citizens in the community, it was not to be wondered that Nelly Bingham, gay and happy, and always so daintily gowned, was quite the belle of the town and a great favorite, and with the gradual putting aside of playthings and dolls, parties and picnics became the order of the day or evening, and dashing young Myron Bates was her most frequent escort. And why not? Leland Bates owned the harness shop with shoe shop in connection and Myron was an only child.

Not much was known of his mother, only that she had come, a Southern belle, to visit in a nearby town and had stayed to marry quiet, hard-working Leland Bates, much to the surprise of friends of both sides, for no one had dreamed of Lee being attracted by such a butterfly of fashion, and Ermina had made her Virginia home, where she had lived with her aunt, a constant topic.

A SIX COSTS LESS TO RUN

... and the CHEVROLET OVERHEAD VALVE SIX

is the most economical car in the world

CHEVROLET Engineering facts prove it. Experience in building nearly ten million cars confirms it. And the record of over 3,000,000 Chevrolet Six owners removes any shadow of doubt about it: The only way to get real economy in a low-priced car is to insist on SIX cylinders and OVERHEAD valves.

SIX cylinders—no more!—because extra cylinders mean extra cost for gas, oil, upkeep and parts. OVERHEAD valves—nothing else!—for the same good reason—that airplanes use them. And speedboats. And racing cars. They get the MOST power out of the LEAST gas. That's why overhead valves are the choice of leaders—and champions.
