COMMENT AND CRITICISM

Everyone was so busy, last night, congratulating the graduates that they forgot another very happy class of people who attended the commencement exercises. . . . Ma and Pa. Oh how hard they worked to see their children get that important start in life. . . . a high school education. Oh how they saved and did without things to allow son and daughter work up to commencement night. How many graduates were thanking their parents, in their hearts, as they received their diplomas. So now that the last dance of class day has been danced; the valedictorian has finished her speech; the graduate has reached his peak of glory; may we join with the lucky boys and girls in congratulating that grand couple, mother and dad.

In another part of this paper the school news staff for the year 1934 sings its swan song. Loud may they sing. . . . and long. Particularly interesting was Winchell's Flash column. The school activities were well reported even to the class rooms under high school. To those who have asked who wrote the Flashes. . . . We answer. . . . we do not know. . . . like ships that pass in the night. . . . someone did a good job. . . . and without waiting for thanks. . . . silently went his. . . . or her. . . . way. To the Class of 1935 your public is waiting for you. May we suggest to anyone of this class that nominations for next year's staff are now open.

Anyway, gentle reader, the dust will not fly in Clarkston this summer. The City fathers, apparently tired of the complaints last year, oiled so well this year that driving over the streets now one cannot tell the difference between the gravel roads and the pavements, except for that certain rattle, somewhat like a machine gun, which an oiled road always produces.

And Mr. Advertiser, if you are looking for a good advertising medium, the News added 23 new subscribers this last month. There is one in favor of newspaper advertising. It rarely misses the train. . . . is it. . . . and if properly used, contains as much "News" to the reader as any event in the paper.

Obituary

Clarkston's Heroes Honored Wednesday

Spanish-American and World War Veterans Attend Services

Memorial services for Clarkston's heroes of our country's wars were held Wednesday in Lake View Cemetery. Surviving members of the Spanish-American War as well as the World War together with the Legion Auxiliary attended.

Perhaps this year's attendance was larger than in the past, a large number of civilians being present to hear the program.

The procession left the Legion Hall at shortly after 10:00 o'clock, led by the color guard and followed by the National Guard firing squad from Pontiac. Next came the drums, played by Clark Souby and Howard Newbanks. Following the music marched the American Legion, offering an attractive sight in their white trousers, blue coats and blue and gold Legion caps. The Spanish-American veterans followed in cars as did the Legion Auxiliary.

The program at the cemetery was as follows: Opening of military services by Percy Craven, commander. Chaplain's prayer, given by Comrade G. K. Rosenquist. Decoration of graves by Sergeant-at-Arms, Comrade J. M. Terry. Firing of salute and taps. Music by all led by High School Chorus which was led by Miss Lolita Mann.

Introduction of speaker. Speaker of the day, Rev. J. Wallace Jacobus.

Singing of "America", all joining and led by Lolita E. Mann.

For a number of years the list of honored dead has carried one hero as "buried on Hiber Lot". Mr. S. M. Morgan informed the News that this soldier was William Henry, a relative of the Hibler's and that he died at the home of Mr. Morgan's parents at the age of 64 and of a disease contracted during service in the Civil War.

The name of William Mervin had not been included as a member of the World War, which omission was corrected during the ceremony.

Liberty Theatre HOLLY

The Gay Nineties are coming back in "The Bowery"!
 Hilarious fun, robust romance and naughty nights of Frankie and Johnny times are promised with the arrival of Wallace Beery, George Raft, Jackie Cooper, Fay Wray, Pert Kelton and a host of other celebrities in "The Bowery" at the Liberty Theatre on Sunday and Monday.

Of all the decades in American history, that from 1890 to 1900 seems to be the most popular in these times with photoplay audiences. So, in tune with that expressed preference, "The Bowery" brings back the music and dances of the '90's, buxom chorus girls, bustling young ladies, Mamie O'Grady with puffed sleeves, Bowery boys with puffed eyes, prize fights that were on the square, beer with a punch and love's young dream along "the liveliest mile on the face of the globe"—New York's world-famous Bowery.

"The Bowery" brings back to life, re-created from faded tints and photographs yellowed with age, such famous characters as Chuck Connors, Mayor of Chinatown; Steve Brodie, who did the famous brodie from Brooklyn Bridge and lived to tell about it; John L. Sullivan smacking 'em down for a $25 purse; Carrie Nation with her hatchet battling the beer bottles on the Bowery; as well as many other celebrities of the times.

"The Bowery" reunites the two stars of "The Champ"—Wallace Beery and Jackie Cooper, who were loaned to 20th Century Pictures by M-G-M. George Raft was loaned by Paramount, while Fox contributed its ace director, Raoul Walsh.
 Feminine interest in "The Bowery" will be intense because of the emphasis placed on the part the Bowery girls played in the life of the romantic old thoroughfare. Fay Wray and Pert Kelton head the large feminine cast.

For Homemakers

More than a thousand groups have been organized during the past year in home economics extension work with a total enrollment of 18,200, according to Miss Edna V. Smith, state leader of home demonstration agents.

Seven hundred and fifty made-over dresses have been reported in each of four counties. A saving of $1,900 in the county and $1,400 in another was estimated by groups making over clothes. Considerable ingenuity was shown in effecting these savings, one woman having made herself a very attractive suit from alkali sacks.

In one county 9,800 quarts of meat and chicken were canned as a contribution to home living. The majority of women reported at least 65 per cent of their living being raised on their own farms and many are getting as much as 90 per cent.

Burlap sacks, old clothes, and odds and ends of material which could not be used for anything else have been made into several thousand rugs. As an example of what can be done toward remodeling and refinishing old furniture, an attractive bedroom chair has been made from an old kitchen chair, an auto seat and a slip cover.

Timing Made Easy On Chevrolet

Hairbreadth accuracy in timing motor ignition, heretofore a job for a trained expert, is made so simple that anyone can do it in a few minutes by an ingenious application of stroboscopic principles developed by Chevrolet engineers. As a result, the owner of any 1934 Chevrolet car or truck may roll it into an official service station, and have his timing perfectly adjusted with even less trouble and delay than are involved in having his battery checked; in fact, without even stopping his engine. An accuracy in timing to one-half of one degree is readily obtained.
 The Chevrolet arrangement is to use a polished steel ball, pressed into the rim of the flywheel, as a marker, instead of the usual faint groove; and to provide simple and inexpensive means of making the ball clearly visible and seemingly standing still every time the spark plug of No. 1 cylinder fires, while the engine is running at idling speed.
 This stroboscopic effect is obtained by using a special Neon lamp connected to the spark plug. With the engine running at 500 r. p. m., the lamp illuminates the ball for an instant 250 times a minute. If the timing is correct, the ball appears directly under the fixed pointer. If it most pampered child in town. Spirited and really handsome, he sported the finest horse and harness and buggy in town, was always well-groomed and up in his studies and very likeable, so it was not to be wondered at that both families looked with approval on this schoolmate friendship, which promised much for the future, and who would say that he would not be as successful as his father?

Then one day Lee Bates was found dead by his bench, dying as he had lived, working quietly. His will provided for Ermina and left the shop unconditionally to Myron.

In the years to come Nelly was to think much of those days; of Mrs. Bates and Myron making a social call, and while she and Myron busied themselves with the pastimes of that day, Mrs. Bates suggested in her very convincing manner an early marriage. Myron must spend his time now looking after the business, and no one dreamed but what these two young folks who spent so many hours together would make an ideal couple and establish an ideal home.

June, the month of brides and roses, never saw a fairer bride than Nelly Bingham. Aunt Almada made the daintiest of dresses, and while the wedding was a quiet one on account of the recent death of Myron's father, and was at the Bingham home because of Aunt Almada, it was everything any young girl could have wished for.

To be sure, there were gossipy old ladies in those days the same as today, and they shook their heads as their tongues wagged the old couple of impending doom to those who "changed the name and not the letter, changed for worse and not for better."

Nelly laughed away their fears, for who could be happier than she and Myron? Father Bingham's gift was a home and with Myron in the shop Nelly was left to drive around town or out to the farm, for housekeeping in the new home, with all the dainty new china and linen and new furnishings was quite like caring for a child's playhouse.

Before fall Myron had quite changed his mind about the business, and staying in a hot, smelly shop was not a bit to his liking. Besides, he knew nothing of the work and must hire a man, so why not let him look after the customers? Then the books became a tangled mess and Myron took them home to Nelly, who knew as much about bookkeeping as band, and all too soon she was finding out that a spoiled son does not make an indulgent husband.

Spring days brought a little, new arrival, who was promptly named John Leland and who bade fair to become as badly spoiled as his father by doting grandparents and Aunt Almada. Nelly was but a shadow of her former self and as Myron rarely came home to lunch, her father came for her almost every morning to spend the day with mother and Aunt Almada that they might help care for the young man. Nelly made no complaints but the Bingham could well see that the small shop, so well managed by thrifty, saving Lee Bates, could not possibly support a hired man, Myron's extravagances, and a growing family, so they concealed their thoughts and made many excuses to provide the necessities, that their cherished daughter might not want.

Another year had passed a little sister came to keep young John company. Mrs. Bingham and Aunt Almada begged to name her Marian and her father added Ruth for his only sister left, so long ago, and so it was settled without conferring with Mrs. Bates, Sr. much to that lady's displeasure.

Nelly had never dreamed but that all men were like her father, whom she had always known as a devoted slave to her frail little mother and Aunt Almada, quick to act if all hand, and chiding if they did not call him. And now she was slowly facing the truth that she had pledged herself "till death do us part" to one who knew nothing of assisting her but expected to be waited upon for every whim just as he had been at home. Aunt Almada was failing and this made an excuse for her father to come almost daily for her and the babies, bring her home at night in time to prepare the evening meal for Myron, and more often than not bringing it ready prepared from the farm, for her father rightly surmised that the Bates larder was now very low most of the time.

The babies grew, as healthy babies will, and as the seasons rolled into years they were soon toddling off to school.

Aunt Almada had been laid to rest in the sacred plot on the hillside beside little John and Nelly felt she must be more cheerful than ever with her parents, though how she did not know. The business had dwindled into nothing, they had long ago ceased to have a harness maker, and the cobbler in the rear paid but scant attention to the rare customers who came in. Nelly's purse was always empty and Myron managed somehow to get a little from his mother for his own personal wants, but dismissed his family's needs without a thought.

Aunt Almada had left a birthday and Christmas gift fund for Nelly and the two precious babies who had been the light of her life in her last years, and her father and mother made many excuses, poorly concealed at times, to give the children gifts of money. She would find a bill or bits of silver in the least expected place, and invariably washed them with tears.

John was a sturdy little fellow, like his grandfather Bingham in many ways, and Marian was a little beauty who kept everyone laughing at her quick retorts and independent ways, and they were constantly at war with their grandmother Bates, who was secretly disgusted with Myron's failure and tried unsuccessfully to place some of the blame at least on Nelly and the children.

The shop was often closed days at a time now as Myron disliked buying a fire, even when he had fuel, and much preferred spending his time in other more comfortable places.

Then came the unexpected! An oil company wanted the corner location and had offered an unusual price and Myron was ready to sell at the first word. But for once Mother Bates took a firm hand and urged Nelly not to sign only under certain conditions. First, the proceeds must be put into a fund that could be drawn upon only for actual expenses each month, and Nelly should have half of the proceeds of the auction sale of material, tools and building.

Myron had hot, angry words with his mother, for which she never forgave him and flung herself out of the house, but she and Nelly, standing together, were firm and the sale was made.

Automobiles were fast taking the place of horse and buggy and Lee Bates could never have dreamed of the little corner lot he had bought of Henry Fields selling for such an unheard-of sum.

Things were brighter now for the family and it was well they were for Jack and Marian had begun to feel the sting of pride when other children spoke of their shiftless father. Now, of course, with the shop sold, there was some excuse for loafing. To be sure, there were plenty of jobs, but the blood of Southern gentlemen was in his veins and he would never work unless compelled to.

Then Mother Bates came down with a cold that turned to pneumonia and after many hours of nursing, when Nelly never left her side, she apparently recovered, only to suffer a relapse, and passed away. At least, that is what Dr. Marston termed it, but gossip of the town called her broken heart over the failure of her idolized son.

No one was surprised when her will left the house, with all its old Southern furniture and fine linens and all her personal jewelry and belongings to Nelly to be passed on to her two grandchildren.

If Myron had made her suffer, she reached back from the grave to punish him, for the village newspapers published the will in full and it was the talk of the town.

And now, for her to marry plain Lee Bates and take up housekeeping without ever going back home was long a subject for conversation. Rumor had it that Lee had taken her for a ride following a picnic party, visiting the preacher in the next town before returning home. If she had done the planning and proposing, as surmised, none would ever know, for the next morning he treated his friends to cigars, smiling in his quiet way, and continued his work. Industrious and saving, he was able to establish his bride in a very pretty cottage and considerable fine linen and rare old furniture came to the Bates home from Virginia, besides a small monthly check that was quite sufficient to keep Ermina provided with the pretty clothes she loved so well. Myron, the only child, was much like his mother and was perhaps the

COUNTY AG. AGENT ADVISES FARMERS

Regarding Terms of Payment on Corn-Hog Contracts

Misunderstanding about the time of payment to farmers on the corn-hog contracts should not cause Oakland County farmers to prejudice their claims to benefit payments by planting land to crops not permitted under the contract, according to Frank Gromak, Holly, chairman of the county allotment committee.

Too much optimism about the speed with which the contracts could be handled led to a misunderstanding about the time of payments. Another factor which caused confusion was the intention of federal authorities to make early payments in some counties where the need was greatest. With the best intentions in the world, it is impossible to make immediate payments on hundreds of thousands of contracts.

Benefit payments are made only after the contracts have been approved in Washington. Some checks have been mailed to regions where there was extreme need, due to crop failures. The Oakland County allotment committee does not believe that farmers here wish to have their dates of payment based upon the assumption of dire need, and perhaps, by this action postpone payment in districts where farmers are actually in need of life's necessities.

Payments on hog contracts are made in three installments. The first installment is two dollars per head on 75 per cent of the average number of hogs marketed in the past two years. A farmer who sold an average of 12 hogs per year would get $18, minus his share of local expenses as soon as the contracts are approved in Washington. The second payment, to be made this fall, will be $9.00; and the third check, paid next spring if the contract terms have been met, will be $18.00.

The three payments will total $45, minus a small amount for local expenses, to the Oakland County farmer who has had average sales of 12 hogs per year in the past two years. Those who have sold greater or smaller numbers will receive proportionately sized checks.

Payments for corn reduction are made in two installments, one when the contracts are approved in Washington and the second when contract fulfillment can be proved. Payments on corn are 30 cents per bushel on the estimated yield of the land taken out of production. Local expenses will be deducted from the corn payments the same as for payments on hogs.

Oakland County contracts are being handled by a local committee whose members are Frank Gromak, Alex Solley and Lester Houghton. They are using every effort to speed the completion of contracts from this county and V. H. Church, state statistician, at East Lansing, has assured the committee that there will be no unnecessary delays in his office.

Errors made at early meetings when farmers were told they would get their money as soon as they signed contracts can not be corrected but these errors should not cause farmers to break their contracts and thereby sacrifice certain profits. The clerical work in the county and state takes time, and authorities at Washington must handle thousands of contracts each day. The task is enormous but the payments are certain.

K. D. Bailey,
County Agricultural Agent.

SHEEP OWNERS INVITED TO SEE DEMONSTRATION

Farmers should drench sheep regularly every four to six weeks during the grazing season, according to K. D. Bailey, County Agricultural Agent. Internal parasites cause many deaths among sheep and great financial losses to owners. They sap the vigor and retard growth of lambs. Stomach and tape worms are the most common parasites of sheep.

The best time to drench sheep is once a month during grazing season but not less than three times. Some sheep men who have started the practice are drenching at monthly intervals during the summer months. All lambs should be treated now, as some examined recently were dying from tape worms.

Demonstrations on parasite control will be made at six farms in the county, including two in this area, as follows:

9:30 A. M. Thursday, June 14, Jesse Bigelow, 5 1/2 miles East of Holly on M-87.

1:00 P. M. Thursday, June 14, Fred Wellberry, 1 1/2 miles North, 2 1/2 miles East, 1/2 mile North of Highland in White Lake Township.

The National Gallery of London founded in 1824 has over 3,300 pictures in its entire collection, more than 1,000 of these are on exhibit in its twenty-nine room gallery.
