COMMENT AND CRITICISM

Any way you look at the question, there is slight doubt that Tuesday was, to say the least, slightly warmer than the average day. In fact, one might say that the temperature as registered on any thermometer would be an altitude of from 105 in the shade to perhaps higher if one cared to stand in the sun to get a reading. Some were reposing in front of an electric fan, others sought comfort in different swimming holes. Some contented themselves by drinking soft drinks while still others sought the harder variety. Some stayed in the house, with shades down to keep out the heat, while others moved their chairs around the lawn to discover if there was a breeze blowing from any direction. Many expressed their impressions of how warm the day was and were careful to explain just how heat affected them. The remarks were varied. Some were funny and some were just honest to goodness complaints. The quaintest remark was made by P. L. McLaughlin, who, driving into the yard spoke in this wise, "The frost should be out of the ground by now."

Without taking any credit, based on our recent request for a homecoming for Clarkston, nevertheless, Clarkston is going to have a real get-together for four days next week. Come back and renew old acquaintances. It will do your heart good.

Nominations are now all in for the Primary Election. Friday is the deadline for any who care to withdraw. After the last date the fight is on in earnest. May the best man in each party win.

"If you attended church as you should you would know Mrs. Bates. Mrs. Bates, allow me to present Mr. Hamilton, one of my flock, usually missing." And with this banter he left them and they soon were deep in the merits of certain laces when again interrupted, this time by one who brought the breezes of youth and freshness right with her.

"Mother, you do look charming! Oh, pardon me! I did not see you were busy. I was so excited and happy at seeing you."

"My daughter, Marian, Mr. Hamilton."

Taken into the circle, Marian bowed and said, "Good evening," and slipped her arm around her mother in a little hug, as she spoke to Mr. Hamilton. "Don't you just love bazaars? I'd like to buy something at every stand."

"Just what, now? I've been wishing I might buy something as wishing is used to drag me from one to the other, loading the packages higher each time. But I never know what to buy or what to do with it?"

"Easiest thing in the world," responded Marian. "First, right here of mother, I'd buy Miss Ward, our mother, lovely new go-to-church cuffs; next, little Carlotta has never had a doll, and I'd buy her the biggest and cuddliest; the janitor's new baby hasn't a single pink, woolly thing, and the old lady with fruit would like a new warm shawl, and the four boys in the flat near me haven't a single holder or apron, and—"

"Enough! Enough! You've proved your ability. Mrs. Bates, in the interest of the Guild, may I borrow your daughter as a personal advisor while we make the rounds?" Turning to Marian, he added, "On condition that you will not only select but dispose of the loot."

"I'm sure Marian would love to do the selecting but I warn you she is a born bargain hunter."

"Do you really mean that, Mr. Hamilton? I was day dreaming out loud, but it would be grand," Marian exclaimed.

"Mrs. Bates, you are to select three sets of cuffs and collars for my housekeeper, very plain, old Aunt Martha, and Miss Marian's friend, Miss Ward. Now for a real shopping expedition!"

And laughing gaily, they started out and Eleanor turned to other patrons. Busy, she forgot them both

1934 Class Poem

By Dorothy Vine Ware
OUR MOTTO

Behold! We've come to this eventful day
Toward which we've strived with all our might to gain,
A time that will forever live as gay
When thoughts will lead us off long memory's lane.
Even as at present many sights we view
It takes the big, the small, the sad, the gay,
Of days gone by, of acts well done, or no,
Of joys, of sorrows, studies, parties, sports,
As we prepare to school to say, "Adieu."
'Tis to the future that we look and pray,
That we may happy and successful be
Right onward striving as we have alway,
Improving, aiding everywhere the need we see
To follow as our guide, the challenge clear,
That, "We're now becoming, what we are to be."

Forever we shall carry this one thought,
"That Character's not molded in a day."
If take the big, the small, the sad, the gay,
The major, also minor things, that ought
And do have much influence on our lives
To build this character and personality
That we display in all reality,
'Tis but a product of our youthful lives,
Result of labor, parents' guidance, too,
Assistance lent by many teachers true.
The task of forming character is ne'er
Completed, but ever-keeping pace with time;
So onward we must go, our motto be,
"We're now becoming, what we are to be!"

We pause to peer at life that is to be
And note the many opportunities
It offers for our constant wish and needs
To carry for our work as is to be,
In building worthwhile personalities,
Perhaps we'll find much former aid is gone,
That we'll be left alone to carry on,
"Sweet are the uses of adversities."
Has oft' been quoted and by each found true
Whenever one may wish himself improved;
So from the present to Eternity
Our aim will be to use adversity
To build, construct foundations firm that we E'er prove, "We're now becoming" what we are to be."

EDNA COY RETURNS HOME FROM HOSPITAL

Miss Edna Coy, who was seriously hurt in a car accident several weeks ago, returned to her home on Tuesday. Edna has been in the Goodrich Hospital ever since the night of the accident and a number of times her life seemed in the balance. However, where there was life there was hope and after these many trying weeks Edna is back to be with her friends again and we are informed that with plenty of care and timely rest she will be all right.

Clarkston Locals

Miss Mary Kathryn Hammond and John Ronk have returned after spending a few days visiting the former's sister and family, Mr. and Mrs. Emmert Brandt and family, of Flint.
David Jones had as his guests last Thursday, Mrs. Margaret Newman of Grosse Pointe, Mrs. Edna Small of Kalamazoo, Mrs. Margaret Hecox of Detroit and Charles Hecox and daughter of Pontiac.
Tuesday broke all records in the matter of heat, according to the Detroit Weather Bureau, and Clarkston Weather Bureau, if there were one, undoubtedly would have the same report to make. The thermometer reached over 100 degrees. Excessive heat has now been our portion for over a week and prospects for crops are gloomy. Several farmers who have fine looking fields of potatoes have dug down and found no tubers set, and corn is shriveling up.

SEEK SIX CHANGES IN CONSTITUTION

Summary of Amendments to Be Voted on Next Fall

Although nearly a score of proposed changes to the state constitution were discussed in the last few months, only six of the proposals have been qualified for places on the ballot at the November election. Five of the petitions will be submitted to the voters after initiatory petitions bearing sufficient signatures were filed with the Department of State. The sixth question was ordered on the ballot by the legislature. The order in which the proposals will appear on the ballot and brief summaries follow:

- 1—This provides that all judges be elected on non-partisan ballots.
- 2—This proposal would reduce the gasoline tax from three to two cents and would prohibit the legislature from increasing the tax above two cents a gallon.
- 3—At the present time the automobile weight tax is 35 cents per hundredweight. This proposed amendment would prohibit the legislature from increasing the weight tax above the present figure.
- 4—Reorganization of county systems of government along plans adopted by the legislature or submitted by initiatory petition, is provided for in the fourth proposal. The amendment would permit abolishing any present constitutional office upon approval of a majority of the voters in a county.
- 5—This proposed amendment would eliminate the "uniform Taxation" provisions from the state constitution and would allow the legislature to enact an income tax law.
- 6—This proposal would give justices of the peace jurisdiction in civil cases up to $300 in cities of more than 250,000 inhabitants.

Come Back to Clarkston and Visit with Your Old Friends

Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday of next week will be set aside for the Clarkston Homecoming and all old residents of this vicinity are urged to come home and renew old acquaintances.

President McKinley, once observed that occasions of this kind are milestones that mark the progress of the community. After all there is nothing like the old home town and the memories of old friends, while never forgotten, become clearer after a few days spent with them again.

The manager of the amusements promises something doing every day that will be of interest to everyone. The tentative program calls for a pet parade Aug. 2nd at 5 P. M. All entries are to be filed with Mr. Leonard at the Buick Garage.
August 3rd is to see a political rally and an old fiddlers' contest.
August 4, Saturday, will see boys' and girls' running races, bicycle races, roller skating races, fat men's race, fat women's race, and tug of war. The program starts at 2 P. M.
In addition to the above which we are informed does not cover the entire program as lack of time did not allow the entire program to be published in this issue, there will be band concerts and street dancing every night and free attractions every day. As for accommodations, elsewhere in this issue you will find the cards of fine places to eat in Clarkston. Places where you can get the kind of a meal that you used to have when you lived here, providing those meals were the best.

Take a vacation and stay at the inns around Clarkston. Fishing is good. The rooms are cool.
The amusements will be under the personal supervision of E. G. Wilson of the E. G. Wilson Amusement Enterprises. We are informed that Mr. Wilson was here two years ago and furnished a very good week's entertainment in the village.

The villagers of Clarkston, we urge you to write to friends urging them to come back home, at least for a few days and enjoy our good times. The News will welcome a visit. So many former inhabitants are reached by us thru this paper and they have informed us so often how they enjoy our efforts, we would like to meet all of them.
Let's have a good time.

Aftermath

for the moment, but some time later they reappeared, bundles wrapped and unwrapped under arms and on top of arms, laughing like children.

"Mother, we've had the best time and Mr. Hamilton is going to drive me home with all this luggage. Won't it be fun to give it all away! Don't stay too late, dear, and I'll call you tomorrow. Good night," and she brushed her mother's cheek with a kiss.

They stored the loot in the back of the car and Marian gave the address as they swung into the traffic, and she sank back in the soft seat.

"What a marvelous car," she exclaimed. "And what a marvelous girl!" he responded. "I didn't know such girls existed any more."

"Do you tell that to all of them?" "Well, you are the first one to ride in this car and pass judgment, so I haven't had much chance."

"Is it such a new car?" purred Marian.

"No, Ma'am. Over a year old and plenty of mileage, but I do not meet people like you and your mother very often."

"Didn't mother look lovely and quaint? I was so glad to see her looking so happy and feel rather selfish right now as I should have stayed and helped her home."

"Perhaps she will let me drive her home also; that is, if it would be quite proper, I mean."

"Mother is all alone," answered Marian, rather soberly, "and that is why I feel selfish as my brother Jack and I are all she has left and we leave on our vacation tomorrow."

Perhaps it was great-grand-mama Parker's spirit, and perhaps Marian had sudden ideas of her own, for quite unlike her usual retiring self, she chatted freely with her new acquaintance, aided by his cleverly questioning replies.

"Has your mother lived here long? I haven't attended church as regularly lately as I should."

"A little over a year, but did not go out much till recently. You see my lovely grandmother died suddenly and grandfather just couldn't forget her, so he didn't want to live either and in a few months he was gone, and we all adored him. Then in less than six weeks my father was killed in an auto accident, so mother came to us here and has been so wonderful. You really ought to know my mother!" And he silently agreed to the last.

As he assisted with the packages and wished her luck in disposing of them, he slipped a card into her hand and said: "Have a good time and remember me when you come back and we'll continue our acquaintance. Do I dare suggest taking your mother home?"

"Oh, that would be lovely, and such a nice night you might get lost. It isn't far enough with such a nice car. Tell her I ordered it; she loves to have us pretend to boss her."

Marian smiled to herself as she looked at the card, and said:

"Robert Lewis Hamilton. Nice man and nice name! That's the kind my mother should have married."

Chapter XXI

Meanwhile, Robert Hamilton was on his way back, cutting in at every chance lest the bazaar be closed or his new acquaintance gone. Eleanor was packing up her pillow when he bowed low before saying:

"Your daughter was so well pleased with my driving that she commissioned me to take you home also, and I haven't paid my bill here yet for three sets of cuffs and collars."

"Too astonished at his first words to really grasp the second sentence, she was at a loss as to how to answer. But he continued:

"Such a wonderful girl! She would have delighted my mother as she never knew what she was going to do with her loot as Miss Marian did, but it surely brought back happy moments."

The last words struck home. Here was some one who had lost loved ones the same as she had and was perhaps just as lonely, and she remembered how pleased Rev. Swan had been to introduce him, so the smile came back as she made out a slip for his purchase and said:

"That sounds just like Marian, but I must not impose on good nature. It was so kind of you to take her home and she will have a great time disposing of all her booty."

Handing her a bill that twice covered the slip, he said:

"Add that to your totals, and is this ready to go? I will be at the side door. I have another message that must wait until you are in the car. That other package is fruit and candy for you."

Eleanor smiled warmly as she said: "I will be ready in a very few moments."

Once in the car, she sank back and realized how very tired she was.

"Pretty tired, I should say," was his comment.

"Never mind the address just yet, as your daughter suggested that I get lost as it was too nice a night not to drive around. Which way? Around the boulevard?"

"Oh, I love the lights when they stretch away like this, and I shall have to give Marian a severe talking to after she gets back from her vacation. I do want them to have a good time."

"Ever been to the Lawson fountain at night?"

"No, but I've often wanted to."

"Then that is our first place. A little ride will rest you after being in that close room so long."

They viewed the fountain and stopped at a curb stand for an ice, that Eleanor laughingly called a

"stirrup cup" only the horse was missing, and all too soon they were back at 89 Park Place and saying "Good night," and all the other proper things that good breeding calls for.

Robert Hamilton drove slowly home, full of thoughts of the happenings of the evening and was thinking of them when he fell asleep and still thinking when he absentmindedly sugared his coffee the second time and let his toast get cold, while his faithful man, "Charlie," looked at him anxiously.

"Charlie," Radcliffe had long been one of the household, a stranded English sailor picked up by Robert and his mother following an accident. They had inquired after him at the hospital and found work for him in the garden when he recovered, and he soon endeared himself to both.

and proved to be much more of a gardener than sailor and took complete charge of the grounds. Since Mrs. Hamilton's death he had been almost a constant companion of "Master Robert" and was now quick to sense something wrong.

"Charlie, I met two real ladies last night, took them both for a ride and almost fell in love with both. Funny thing too I hope I did, if I thought I had a chance. A Mrs. Bates and her daughter, Marian, and I only wish mother could have met them."

"It would seem nice to have a mistress in the house again, replied Charlie, "and most young ladies would be glad of such a chance. You don't look your age, Master Robert."

"Not the girl, Charlie. She's just like the bay filly we bought to save. She's a thoroughbred, clean and straight and strong, and carries herself like a queen. But the mother, Charlie—say, would it be all right to send some flowers this morning?"

And soon he told Charlie all about it, and Charlie was happy at knowing that his master and friend had had a pleasant evening, a far too seldom an event.
