COMMENT AND CRITICISM

That silver lining you see on yonder cloud is the brighter future that this or that candidate promises if you elect him or her.

Einstein may know about the theory of "relativity of time" but we would like to see him reconcile these two contrasts: The school child's dread of the opening of school showing how fast time can fly and the politician's wish that the election was over, showing how time can stand still.

Given a reasonable time, everything, even you or I will wear out. For the past few years this wear has been taken as a matter of course and nothing done about it. Now most places give us medical attention if we cannot pay to stop our physical wear. And the Federal government is arranging to loan money to repair our property. In other words: A sort of Federal "Clean up-Paint up" proposition.

It has been explained to me that anyone who smokes cigarettes is somewhat simple. Be that as it may—still I cannot imagine that it would make one simple enough to drop lighted cigarette stubs in the mail chutes, where they may burn letters already in the box. Of course the fact that this is done when the post-office is closed and naturally after dark may give false courage to the smoker.

Sometimes I feel sorry for our public office holders. Any two people will have different ideas—and both will expect the OH to see their side of the question and act accordingly. And if he takes a side in the last few months of his administration, he will be doing it for political purposes and to win the election.

In the ring the old and true saying is: "They never come back." Wonder if Groesbeck is wondering if this is true in politics?

Political parties, like humans, are made up of some good and some bad. And the only thing our dear old common people can do is to stick to the party whose principles best suit them and let the good try and improve the bad for the sake of the party.

Anyway, we can enjoy the State Fair at Detroit before the Primary gets too hot.

TOWN FOLK HONOR MISS PHYLLIS KING

Bride-to-be Is Kept Busy Attending Parties

Miss Phyllis King is the popular young lady in Clarkston these days. Many occasions are being given in her honor. Last Friday Mrs. Louis Walter was hostess at an afternoon tea for Miss King. The guests assembled at the Walter home on Washington Street about three o'clock and for an hour or so contests suitable for such an occasion were indulged in. The honoree received the contest prizes which she will find very useful in the days to come.

Later in the afternoon Miss King was presented with a very pretty junior lamp, which the group thought would help light her way to happiness.

Refreshments were served, and the guests were seated at small tables centered with roses. Mrs. George D. King, mother of the honoree, presided at the tea table.

On Saturday afternoon Miss King was honored at a bath-room shower given by Miss Virginia Clark. Miss Clark was assisted by one of her sorority sisters, Miss Doris Ferris of Grosse Pointe.

The group was entertained on the grounds at the home of Miss Clark's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Lee Clark. On entering the grounds Miss King was given an apron for holding clothes pins and then made captain of the contest and each in the party went a-hunting, in the trees and bushes on the grounds. Their find was clothes pins and those getting the greatest number were presented with a bottle of bluing and a bar of soap, both of which were given to Miss King.

The presenting of the shower gifts was handled in a very unique style. Little Joan Fuller, dressed like a little doll in a pink and white frilly dress, entered upon the scene, bearing a message in the shape of a heart. This message was a wish, from the party, for happiness for the bride-to-be. Then Joan and Miss Clark carried in a huge box, covered with hearts. Joan took each gift from the box and presented it to Miss King. The gifts were all orchid and green.

Later in the afternoon refreshments were served and the color scheme used was pink and green.

The guests included the honoree, Miss Phyllis King, and her mother, Mrs. Geo. D. King, her sister, Mrs. Isabel Bullen of Mason, and a cousin, Miss Dorothy Batchelor of Tilbury, Ontario, Miss Jane Sweet of Bloomfield Hills; Misses Marjorie Ellen DeLind, Lolita Mann, Charlotte Spencer and Frances Marshall of Clarkston, Miss Frances Avery of New York, Mrs. Grace Rockwell and Mrs. D. M. Winn of Clarkston, Mrs. Helen Clark and Mrs. Robert Hamilton of Birmingham and Mrs. Lee Clark.

On Wednesday evening of this week Mr. and Mrs. Durand Ogden entertained Miss Phyllis King at dinner at their home. Each guest was given one of those pretty roses from the Ogden Garden.

Phyllis found hidden under her plate at the table a very beautiful handkerchief, one that any bride would appreciate.

Guests included, besides Miss King, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. D. King, Mr. and Mrs. L. F. Walter and Mrs. Ogden's niece, Miss Margaret Fletcher of Detroit.

The thief left by the kitchen door without arousing any of the household.

Barns Destroyed And Cattle Burned

Last Thursday night quite a fire occurred on the El Bird farm, north of Clarkston. The populace round about realized there was a fire somewhere and for a time could not locate it. However the reflection in the sky told them that the fire was to the north and before long it was traced to the Bird farm where Jess Moore is living.

The blaze got quite a start and very little could be done to save the barns and some of the cattle. The only assistance that could be rendered was to keep the fire from spreading. The neighbors from all directions were on the scene to help. The cause of the fire is unknown.

Clarkston State Bank Appointed Credit Agent

B. T. Beardslee, Chairman of Committee

The Clarkston State Bank has been appointed by the government to make loans to repair and modernize your property. Plans for repairing may be secured from Mr. B. T. Beardslee.

The following questions and answers will fully explain how this government aid can help you:

Who may apply?
Any property owner, individual, partnership or corporation with a regular income from salary, commissions, business, or other assured source. It is not necessary to be a depositor in the financial institution concerned.

To whom do I apply?
To any National Bank, State Bank or Trust Company, Savings Bank, Industrial Bank, Building and Loan Association, or Finance Company approved by the Federal Housing Administration; or to a contractor or building supply dealer.

How much may I apply for?
From $100 to $2,000, depending on your income, for improvements on any one property, and in connection with not more than five properties unless approved by the Federal Housing Administration, Washington, D. C.

How long may notes run?
For any number of months from one to three years. (Notes extending from 37 months to five years may be submitted to the Federal Housing Administration by financial institutions for special consideration.)

What security is required?
That you have an adequate regular income and a good credit record in your community.

What assurance need I give?
(a) That you own the property.
(b) That the income of the signers of the note is at least five times the annual payments on the note.

(c) That your mortgage, if any, is in good standing, and that there is no other past due encumbrances or liens against your property.

(d) That you will use the proceeds solely for property improvement.

What signatures are required on the note?
Signature of the property owner; and (except in special cases) if the owner is an individual and is married, also signature of wife or husband. No other co-signers or endorsers are required.

What is the cost of this credit?
The financial institution may not collect as interest and/or discount and/or fee of any kind, a total charge in excess of an amount equivalent to $5 discount per year per $100 original face amount of note.

How do I pay the note?
By making regular, equal, monthly payments (seasonal payments for farmers) until the note is paid in full. May the owner of any kind of property apply?

Applications will be considered for credit to improve one-family, two-family, or other residences; apartment buildings, stores, office buildings, factories, warehouses, farm buildings.

Where do I make payments?
The regular installment payments will be made in person at the place of business of the financial institution; or by mail; or as otherwise arranged. No payment shall be made to any governmental office or organization.

May I pay the note in full before maturity date?
Yes, at any time. A reasonable rebate will be allowed for prepayment, if charges have been collected in advance.

May I make more than one payment at a time?
Yes, as many as you wish, but such payments should be in exact multiples of the agreed payments—that is, if monthly payment is $10, larger payments should total $20, $30, etc., not, for example, odd sums such as $18 or $25.

What if I am late in making my payment?
The maker must not permit his payments to fall in arrears. Should a payment be more than 15 days late, the financial institution's expense, caused thereby, should be reimbursed in part at the rate of not more than five cents per dollar for each payment in arrears. Persistent delinquency will make it necessary for the financial institution to take proper steps to effect collection in full.

ELECTRIC HOT WATER

for THE KITCHEN THE LAUNDRY THE BATH for only 10c A DAY

A new arrangement now brings you Electric Hot Water service for your home at a low rate. By taking advantage of our flat annual rate for year round service, you can enjoy 60 gallons of hot water for 10c a day, and 80 gallons for 12c. Should you desire to use the heater only during the summer months, you may also obtain a seasonal rate, somewhat higher—about 13c a day for 60 gallons, and 16c a day for 80 gallons. The low rate for this service is made possible through a specially designed heater which stores the hot water during the night hours. In this way, you have a measured supply of hot water at a definite cost per day.

TAKE A VACATION FROM DRYING DISHES

Rinse them with plenty of HOT WATER and let stand

DRYING dishes is a hot and irksome task that can be entirely eliminated. When you have piping hot water on tap, you need only rinse your dishes and let them stand. The Cleanliness Institute in a bacteriological study of dish-washing has found that rinsing dishes with very hot water actually leaves them cleaner than wiping with an ordinary dish towel. This is only one of the many helpful uses for a constant and abundant supply of hot water. Here are a few practical suggestions to lighten daily tasks and make your housework easier and pleasanter:

- ¶ Fresh stains of coffee, tea and various fruits yield to hot water; stretch cloth in embroidery hoops and hold under the running faucet.
- ¶ Starting with boiling water shortens the time of cooking vegetables, decreases the loss of food value and helps to retain their color.
- ¶ To keep electric lamp bulbs at their brightest, dust them frequently and wash in lukewarm, soapy water every few months. Wash only the glass bulb and be sure that it is completely dry before screwing it back into the fixture.

You may rent or buy an electric water heater, whichever you choose. Rental rates for heaters are low, and if you prefer to buy the heater, convenient monthly terms may be arranged. Telephone or bring your order to any Detroit Edison office.

the last moment. You don't know what it means to have to cater to some one to help your husband to hold his position. But I must not bore you with my troubles. You look perfectly stunning! I am quite happy now on her refusal. I want you to meet the guest of honor before the ladies come."

As she stood near her hostess in the now rapidly filling rooms, Mrs. Wilson beckoned her to meet a very aristocratic, proper looking person. "Allow me to present Mrs. Bates, your assistant at the tea table, Mrs. Bingham-Post, Mrs. Bates."

Eleanor smiled and turned as she said: "Mrs. Bingham Bates is pleased to meet you."

To one initiated this was very daring, as Mrs. Bingham-Post never forgot for one minute who she was and from whom she descended and was considered a very important "Who's Who".

The shoulders straightened in military fashion and for a moment war was imminent as she replied with lifted brows: "Indeed! I meet the name quite frequently, but none of our family."

This would have crushed some, but here was one of her own calibre and the icy thrust was lost.

"You are more fortunate than I," said Eleanor. "My people all live in New York. I never even encounter the name."

"New York! May I ask from where?" Here was a worthy opponent, and who knew? She might be some one, and she certainly looked like some one.

"My father and grandfather came from Oswego county, but great-grandfather, Amos Bingham, was a pioneer of Jefferson county."

But Mrs. Bingham-Post did not wait to hear more. Clapping her arms about the surprised Mrs. Bingham Bates, she planted a sounding kiss on each cheek, reckless indeed of her make-up, as she exclaimed: "You must be my own dear cousin! There was only one Amos Bingham and he was my grandfather also. Come on, my dear, you must meet my friends. This is so thrilling and I am so indebted to you, dear Mrs. Wilson, I can never thank you enough."

Mrs. Wilson knew that her party would be a success with Mrs. Bingham-Post in such high spirits over discovering a relative in her substitute hostess.

The tea was a success, and more than one envious glance was cast at Eleanor's gown. Mrs. Harrington wished she did not have on quite so much jewelry, and Mrs. Morehouse decided that her husband was right—she did use too much make-up, one looked so much more distinctive without it. And Mrs. Bingham-Post was most cordial and chatted with some she rarely condescended to notice.

"You must come to see me at once," she said to Eleanor, and Eleanor had replied: "Why not have luncheon with me tomorrow and we can have a good visit?" And Mrs. Bingham-Post quickly accepted the invitation.

Eleanor wrote a lengthy letter to Aunt Ellen telling her all about the tea, and her new-found cousin, far removed, and Aunt Ellen laughed heartily over Eleanor's description of her imported gown and its humble origin. Not more so than her cousin next day, who complimented her again on her gown and the dear lady had laughed till tears came as she said: "You are a born Bingham, my dear! No doubt of it now in my mind." And this was just the beginning of more friends, more invitations and the happy days her father had predicted.

call doctors and a nurse and refused to be moved until Eleanor was finally taken out and he was calling her endearing names and trying to awaken her numbed senses.

The minutes seemed endless until the doctor came from his room to which she had been carried, and reported no serious injury but a badly bruised shoulder and twisted ankle. The ankle would have to be in a cast for several weeks, and would he call an ambulance from the hospital.

"Surely not," said Robert. "We will have a nurse at once and her daughter will be here soon. We can take better care of her here."

His own injuries were bruises and a bad cut on one leg, which was now bound up, and felt very tight and stiff. The doctor told Charlie not to let him move far from the davenport for a few days.

The house was so still, with the curtains drawn, and Robert could stand it no longer, and limped slowly across the room and tapped on the bedroom door. The nurse opened it quietly and motioned him in.

"I want to see her just a minute to make sure she is really all right."

One hand lay out on the coverlet, looking very small and white, and he bent over to press it with a kiss as he murmured, "Eleanor, dear." She was at that moment on the borderland, trying to open her eyes, wondering if it was a dream. If so, she did not want to waken up but sleep on with the sound of endearing words in her ear that she remembered only in a dim way.

But now, that voice! She would have come from Paradise to answer that call, and the injured arm was painfully moved till the hand rested on the bowed head in a caress while she whispered, "Robert, dear, so glad you're not hurt."

Then the nurse, hurried up and gave her something to drink and said: "She is coming out of it nicely."

She'll be able to talk all right after a rest."

So Robert went back to his couch happy and fell into a sound sleep, only to be awakened an hour or so later by the sound of sobs. Rising up he exclaimed: "Why, Marian, you dear child, how long have you been here and why didn't you waken me?"

"Charlie said I must be very quiet and it was so still and such a shock and I was afraid I had lost you both."

Charlie came in, first announcing his entrance, with a very discreet cough such as any well-trained English servant knows as the correct thing to do, and announced that tea was ready and should he set the table there, and Mrs. Bates was awake and Marian might see her right after tea.

Marian helped with the table and hovered over Robert and waited on him as he sat propped up with pillows, and Mrs. Pearson came and was introduced and told to have a fire put in his mother's room for Marian. And then they went in to see Eleanor and Marian smothered her with kisses and laughed and cried and Robert limped along and again kissed her hand and assured her that Marian was going to stay and had said "Good night, dear," and Eleanor responded, "Good night and sweet dreams."

Chapter XXVIII.

Charlie was ready to show Marian to her room but Robert had said that they had some very important things to talk about for a few minutes and they were left alone on the davenport by the fire. Robert told her all about the accident and said: "I've tried for months to get up courage to tell your mother how much I love her; have loved her from that first night. And today, when I thought I had lost her—well, I was quite out of my mind. Tell me, Marian, do you think I have a chance?"

Marian longed to tell him that she and Jack had wanted to shake them both many times they were so stupid, but she looked very wise as she said: "Well, if you knew my mother as well as I do and what a wonderful person she is, you would never let that preacher man walk off with her; she's too good for him. And, on the other hand, if I was my mother, and had the chance she has had with such a nice person as you, I'd have grabbed you long ago. Why don't you do the cave stuff with my mother? She'd love it!"

Robert's reply was to fairly crush her in his arms, and just as he called her a dear girl and gave her a good sound kiss, Charlie's discreet cough was again heard. "Just a few more minutes, can't break up the party yet," was Robert's command.

For an idea had formed in his mind and he and Marian planned and whispered, heads close together for some minutes, and when Charlie again appeared both smiled happily and Robert said, "Good night, darling," in a very lover-like way, which Charlie added to his report of the evening to Mrs. Pearson.

Marian, shown to her room by the good old soul, with many apologies for not being ready for company, fairly went into raptures over the rose velvet carpet and hangings and heavy carved furniture. "Isn't it just like a story of the royal princess or something?" as she patted and smoothed and admired, quite winning Mrs. Pearson's heart by her sense of appreciation of her dear mistress's room.

Next morning she was up early and slipping quietly into the living room where Robert was already propped up in a big chair before the fire, he suddenly felt two soft, small hands close over her eyes, and a kiss on the rumpled hair. Grasping the hands firmly, he pulled her down on the arm of the chair as he greeted her with: "Trying to spoil me, young lady? I'm going to beat you to it and spoil you first. How much money can you spend today? It will have to be a lot! Everything will have to be the best and there is a lot to think of in a short time."

Charlie came in to inquire if they would have breakfast served and brought a box from the florist to which Robert added a card across which he wrote: "With love from Robert."

After breakfast Marian and Robert together visited the patient and found her much improved, smiling a greeting over the bouquet of daffodils she was still admiring.

"I must go back into the city this morning, mother dear, and what shall I bring you? The nurse says you may have company for lunch today if you continue to improve and I will be back early."

Robert and Marian later had a conference and Robert called Mrs. Pearson and boldly asked her how she would like a new mistress, and Mrs. Pearson had done her best bow and said: "It would seem very, nice and would make your dear mother very happy."

"I am pretty happy myself today, even if I can't walk, and Marian will tell you what she wishes done and you had better have extra help, at once. You will have a larger family now for a few weeks until Mrs. Bates is able to travel."

"My dear, you don't realize what a load that takes off, and I am sure you will look lovely in anything you select. I will send for you at two, and come to my room; I want to thank you personally beforehand."

Eleanor hung up the receiver and sank into a chair. What had she done? Promised to pour tea at a big affair in a very fine home and she had never even been invited to such an affair before. Well, Aunt Almada had drilled her in the old days when they had make-believe tea parties by the side of the invalid's chair, and she could always act like a lady. Better think what she was going to wear.

First one gown and then another—but each time she turned back to the very daring (to her) gown of tinted lace and cherry velvet and jewelled buttons and decided to try it on at least.

The metallic threads glistened and glistened as she held it up to the light. The skirt was long and gored with rather high waistline caught in a crushed cherry colored velvet belt that fell in long ends at the back under a coat-tail effects of the lace jacket. The under waist was of transparent net and the wide reverses and long sleeves had touches of velvet and many tiny jewelled buttons. Yes, she would wear it, with shoes to match. As she surveyed herself in the glass, she wished for just one bit of jewelry, a feminine wish that was quite justified.

The maid showed her to Mrs. Wilson's room, where that lady was dressing, and she greeted her effusively. "You were so nice about it, and not one of my friends but who would have hesitated and implied that they were second choice."

"A friend is not worthy of the name who would feel like that. I feel honored that you came to me when in trouble."

"You do not know my friends—or, rather, crowd, after your definition of a friend. My husband is in the Central Trust Co., and quite recently the president of the company married his secretary after quite a bit of unpleasant publicity. He gave the force to understand that she was to be invited everywhere, and this is the way she does—sends regrets at

Chapter XXVII.

Spring was surely in the air and Eleanor began to wonder if the tulips at home would come up and just lots of things that sunny days made you think of. The express man came with a crate and it proved to be maple syrup from the farm, and that did not help things any when one is on the verge of homesickness. Then Robert called and said he had a very special invitation from Charlie for her to come and see some choice hyacinths he had in bloom.

"Let's have luncheon first," suggested Eleanor. "I have fresh maple syrup just from the farm this morning. What shall it be? Biscuits or waffles?"

"Not much choice there," answered Robert. "But with waffles I can help."

They sat so long at lunch that Eleanor packed the dishes aside and they set forth in the warm sunshine. Idling along, the house came in sight before they realized it and there was Charlie and some men trimming the hedge. What they did not know was that Fate, in the guise of a coupe into which was crowded three restless youths was close behind them, while ahead moved a loaded moving van. They slowed down still more to let the van pass their gate that they might turn in, and then just at that moment the coupe shot ahead to pass them both, skidded in the loose gravel and caught their rear bumper. There was a sickening thud as the front of their machine was hurled against the stone pillar and the coupe crashed on into the rear of the van.

The workmen hurried and forced the door of Robert's car and pulled him out from under the jammed wheel and then tried to lift a very limp and lifeless form that lay in a crumpled heap in the wrecked side of the car. Another car picked up the injured youth and hurried them back to the city to a hospital, but Robert, though badly hurt, directed them to

HAGENBECK-WALLACE TO VISIT HIGHLAND PARK

The Great Hagenbeck-Wallace Circus will exhibit at Highland Park, Wednesday, Aug. 22. The big show is scheduled for afternoon and night performances, with a huge street parade at 11 a. m.

"Bigger, brighter, and better than ever before," the old stereotype phrase used by circus press agents since the days of P. T. Barnum, has again been chosen the slogan this year, it seems, for the big show boasts of more new features, more thrilling aerial displays, and more spectacular ground, stage and track numbers, than ever before under the Great Hagenbeck-Wallace banners.

The world's greatest wild animal trainer, Clyde Beatty, is again the highlight feature. He appears in person in the largest display of wild and ferocious lions and tigers ever presented in a single display.

The Beatty act has been augmented this season by the addition of eleven newly imported tigers, making a total of forty beasts in the act.

HIGHLAND FARMER BEATS THE DROUGHT

Puts in Irrigation System That Saves His Crops

Frank Williams of West Highland, according to the Milford Times, is probably worrying less about the dry weather than any other farmer in this locality. He has found a way to insure a considerable part of his farm against loss from lack of water in spite of the unfavorable attitude of the weather man.

The answer is an irrigation system which brings the ground water to the surface and makes it do duty in place of rain.

The first well was put down last summer and a few acres irrigated. This summer a second well was dug and the two have capacity to furnish water for upward of 25 acres. At present one centrifugal pump is operated by a tractor and the other by a stationary gasoline engine. The two pumps are estimated to deliver about 150 gallons each per minute and the plant is operated about 19 hours per day at present.

The canvas hose system of distribution is used. This hose is laid between the rows of potatoes or strawberries and is moved about every half hour. Seepage of water through the walls of the hose effects the distribution.

Mr. Williams specializes in strawberries and potatoes, says the Times. He has eighteen acres of the spuds and six and one-half acres of the berries under irrigation. Five acres of the latter are of the Mastodon ever-bearing variety which bore one crop in June and will be ready to deliver the late crop in a week or two. Both potatoes and berries have the deep green and thrifty appearance one would expect to see in plants well fed and well watered.

Visitors from many parts of the state have come to the Williams farm to see the workings of this plant.

STATE MATTERS OF INTEREST TO ALL

Digest Prepared in Office of the Secretary of State

Sale of new automobiles in Michigan was 58 per cent greater during the first seven months of 1934 than during the same period in 1933, records of the department of state show. Used car transactions increased 24 per cent during the same months.

The statistics were obtained from department records showing the number of certificates of title issued. Thus far in 1934, a total of 91,988 titles were issued on new vehicles or 33,999 more than for the corresponding seven months in 1933. 225,445 titles were issued on used cars as compared with 172,896 in 1933.

Another interesting fact is the 24 per cent decrease in the number of vehicles that are repossessed. Thus far this year 5,445 cars were repossessed, being 1,524 fewer than last year.

During the past seven months 845 cars were reported stolen and of this number all but 69 have been reported as recovered. Up to Aug. 1, 1933 a total of 1,114 cars were reported stolen. This decrease in auto thefts is significant when it is realized that 114,398 more vehicles were licensed for operation on Aug. 1 this year.

Copper automobile license plates are being tested in Michigan.

In an effort to ascertain data relative to the use of copper plates, special test plates have been made up and are being used on cars belonging to Secretary of State Frank D. Fitzgerald and other executives of the department. As the cost of copper in past years has been the one factor preventing the use of this metal, the tests are aimed to determine how light a plate may be made and still possess sufficient durability.

A start on the first comprehensive survey of Michigan's waterfowl nesting areas, including a search for nests and broods of young and observations on marsh conditions, has been made by the Game Division, Department of Conservation, with the co-operation of other state institutions.

SENTINELS—Boston, Mass., Post

It has become almost commonplace to hear of telephone operators saving lives while seated before their switchboards. They are frequently the first to discover fires. They are instrumental, too, in preventing crime.

In Chelsea yesterday morning bandits were frustrated because an operator was alert. They tore out an office telephone to use the wire in binding a watchman. Tiny lights flickered on the operator's board and, curious, she rang a second telephone to inquire the trouble. The bandits fled. No small credit is due these telephone girls who seem always wide awake. At night, particularly, they act as unseen sentinels over our communities—and occasionally they perform some act that is so outstanding as to merit the highest praise.

COOK WITH GAS

For Speed - Comfort - Economy - Efficiency

Gas gives you, instantly, any degree of heat that you need—from low simmering to fast boiling. And for broiling, well, nothing can be compared with gas.

No other fuel can give you its speed and economy, its efficiency, and cleanliness.

You are cordially invited to view the many beautiful, new gas ranges on display at our show room.

You will never realize how many improvements and refinements have been added to gas range design—how much smartness and color have been stressed—how automatic and convenient your cooking can be until you see and use a new gas range.
