COMMENT AND CRITICISM

It was the night before Christmas—I beg your pardon. That holiday on Monday is Labor day. It is so cold I got mixed up.

It is safest to get married by some minister. This week a lady came to the Methodist parsonage who had been married by Rev. D. H. Yokum over 50 years ago. Her husband had died and her marriage was questioned from a legal standpoint. The record at Pontiac had been lost or at least was not obtainable. What to do? Why—just go to the Church records and there it was. A new certificate was made out by Rev. Edwards, and the lady was saved her dower right to considerable property.

Perhaps the wild life attraction in Clarkston that draws the most interest is that monster owl in the rear of the Leonard and Miller's Garage. When its eyes rest on you the feeling of wondering just how good your flesh would taste to it causes a longing for other places—places far away from his cage.

Do not be in the last minute rush to get your new driver's license.

My mouth is watering for an apple pie made out of dried apples. The kind the folks used to dry by stringing quartered apples on a long string and draping the kitchen with in the early fall. I never could see apple butter, tho.

Do not drive your car after today without your auto license plates. Stickers just will not do.

Tuesday the schools open and the highways will be filled with youngsters going and coming from school. DRIVE SAFELY! They are young and full of life and now and then they are, without thinking, going to venture out into the street. The law says that you must do their thinking for them. That is one of the prices you pay, to be allowed to drive your car on the highway.

Next week is the final wind-up in political campaigns.

What have you done this year to improve the town in which you live? So many can talk against the town and so few will boost.

Then followed a piano duet by Viola and Dorothy Beardslee; a piano solo, "First Waltz" by Bobby Reid of Drayton Plains; a violin solo, "Minuet in G" by Charlotte Sue Miller; a piano solo by Caroline Walter, a reading by Barbara Chamberlain; a piano duet by Lillian Beardslee and Winnifred Perrin; piano solos were then played by Leda Miller, Phyllis Boyns, Donald Smith, and Marjorie Oakes of Drayton Plains; Harold Konzen favored the group with a violin solo; Dorothy Beardslee, Lillian Beardslee and Elaine Marshall each played a piano solo; another reading by Barbara Chamberlain was then enjoyed and Phyllis Boyns and Winnifred Perrin closed this part of the program with a piano duet.

LOCAL BANK RECEIVES SIGNS

F. I. D. C. Explains Government Insurance

The Clarkston State Bank today received from the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation at Washington the official signs which will hang at all receiving windows as visible evidence that the depositors of this institution are insured.

The Clarkston State Bank is one of more than 14,000 licensed banks in the country which are receiving these signs. Insured banks are able to offer protection to their depositors up to $5,000. Statistical studies have shown that this maximum fully protects more than 97 per cent of all the depositors in insured banks.

A statement by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation follows: "The purpose of the signs is to let depositors know which banks are insured. Heretofore, although 90% of the licensed banks are insured, depositors have had no easy means of identifying them.

"If, by any unforeseen circumstance, an insured bank should suspend, the Insurance Corporation would begin paying off the depositors just as soon as a receiver was appointed for the closed institution. The depositors would receive their money in a few days instead of waiting months or years as was the case in the former method of liquidation. This is not only a benefit to the depositors, but it saves the community from a terrific economic and social blow. When the depositors receive their insured accounts they assign their claims to the Insurance Corporation. Thereafter liquidation proceeds on a business-like basis with the maximum chance of the Corporation and other creditors being paid in full."

MONDAY IS LABOR DAY

The Clarkston State Bank will be closed for Labor Day.

The Postoffice will be open from 10 a. m. to 11 a. m.

PRIMARY ELECTION NOTES THAT ARE OFFICIAL

At least 5,000 Michigan men and women are seeking public office and will have their names presented to the voters at the primary Sept. 11, according to estimates made by the Department of State.

Under recent changes in the election law, there will be many candidates, however, whose names will not be on the primary ballots. In cases where a candidate is unopposed for the nomination for the office he is seeking, the name will not be printed on the ballot. Several county clerks report that this change in the law will result in considerable savings.

Another change in the election law that is of importance to voters is the provision regarding length of residence in the voting precinct. Under the old law, voters were required to live at least 20 days in the ward and precinct in which they voted. The present law requires 20 days residence in the city, village, or township and allows for transfer of registration on election day.

The state law governing election expenses requires every candidate and every primary campaign committee treasurer to file a report of expenses incurred within 10 days following the primary election. Candidates and campaign treasurers have 20 days in which to file reports after the November election.

The government demands that all subscriptions be paid in advance. Now is a good time to pay yours.

FARM AGENT GIVES NEWS OF INTEREST

Sends Out Information That Is of Timely Value.

"Fly Free Date" for planting wheat is announced by K. D. Bailey, County Agricultural Agent, as September 16th.

Hessian-Fly attacks wheat primarily, but it works also in rye and some of the grasses. It causes straw to lodge just before harvest and also causes heads to fill poorly. It kills some plants in autumn and winter.

There may be several generations of Hessian-Fly, but only two of them are of any great importance. The last generation comes in early September and the term "fly free date" means the time when egg laying has stopped. Farmers usually plant wheat after the fly free date so that the plants do not become nesting places for the flies. The date varies from year to year with seasonal conditions and has been determined for this year as September 16th.

This Farm Drudgery Was Never Meant for Human Shoulders . .

CARRYING 50 TONS OF WATER 100 MILES A YEAR!

To the housewife falls much of the task of pumping and carrying water for household uses. Under average conditions, in one year, she will pump from 25 to 50 tons of water and will walk a distance of 30 to 100 miles to carry this water. All this needless drudgery can be eliminated—all these countless steps saved—all this back-breaking toil forever ended by the installation of a running water system. If you have electric power on your farm, you may have your own completely automatic water system and enjoy the same comfort and convenience as if you were living in the city. The operating cost is but a few cents a week.

A running water system is a profitable investment for your farm. Consider these advantages that running water brings you: HEALTH—Plenty of water is essential for health. An abundant supply is a household necessity. It is the answer to the sewerage disposal problem. PROTECTION—Running water furnished by a dependable water system protects you from fire. PROFIT—Since milk is 87% water, a constant supply is necessary for maximum milk production. Hogs will also fatten more quickly if a plentiful supply of water is available.

The operating cost of a running water system is but a few cents a week. Install a water system. Choose a pump big enough for your present and future requirements, and then install outlets or faucets for the kitchen, laundry, barn and garden.

Distributors of pumping equipment in this territory will gladly advise you as to the equipment best suited for your individual needs. Or call The Detroit Edison Company for a complete list of distributors. Attend to this matter TODAY.

Great boxes of flowers came and the living room was transformed almost into a garden and Marian came floating down the stairs looking quite like a flower herself, and Charles' great moment came for he had been carrying the precious necklace all day in his pocket, wondering how he would offer it. But here she was, curtesying, imagine it, to him, and asking how she looked. And he had felt very weak in the knees and there was a big lump in his throat, as he said bravely: "Just one more thing needed," and held up the sparkling necklace a moment for her to admire, then slipped it around her neck and fastened it very clumsily he thought with his trembling hands. If he was shaking and trembling before, what was he now, for Marian was a happy, unspoiled child and followed her first impulse to put her arms around Charles' neck and give him a good sound kiss. And Charles actually liked it.

The hour arrived and Mrs. Pearson in best black silk with the new lace set, and Charlie in his best were sitting primly and, if we must say, rather uncomfortable, waiting. The clergyman from a nearby parish was to officiate and Jack stood by Robert's side as Marian opened the door and assisted the nurse to wheel Eleanor into the room, with Robert leaning on a cane as he came to meet them.

No wedding gown could have been more lovely than the ivory satin negligee Marian had selected and had changed to suit the occasion. The long, loose sleeves were faced with softest blue and touches of it showed at the neck, where a bit of exquisite lace rippled down. Just before the ceremony Robert had sent in the necklace she had admired; a long chain of turquoise and pearls with a note saying: "Wear this to please me; they are all yours now." And she thought of the day, such a short time ago when she had wished for just a bit of some kind, and here was a great case of it. So she hung the lovely old pearls about her neck and slipped on the heirloom diamond and none could wish for one fairer, sweeter or more charming.

Marian stood at one side of the chair and the clergyman was saying:

"Do you, Eleanor, Almeda, take this man to be your lawfully wedded"—and so on; while Mrs. Pearson and Charlie gazed at each other in horror. How could he make such a blunder! Why didn't some one stop him! And then—surely not, but it was Eleanor Almeda who answered in a clear voice "I do," as Mrs. Pearson gave a faint cry of surprise.

The service over, Eleanor was made much of and the clergyman was gone and Robert led the way to the dining room pushing the wheel chair ahead of him. It was a strangely assorted crowd at that wedding supper. The bride, who had descended from a long line of proud people; the groom, who had known poverty as a boy, riches and loneliness as a man; the loving son and daughter, who had shared loneliness and sorrow and neglect with their mother, and her happiness was theirs; the nurse, a stranger in an alien land; Mrs. Pearson, the faithful housekeeper of many years; and Charlie, a homeless sailor in the British Navy until taken in by the man at whose wedding supper he was now seated.

Suddenly Robert remembered Mrs. Pearson's outcry and demanded: "Confess now what was wrong?" And Mrs. Pearson had looked at Charlie and both looked very red and embarrassed, but finally she said: "Well, I'll be telling you, but it's a bit funny after all. You see we thought all along it was the lady, and then with all the whispering and secret talks these few days, and all, we decided it was Miss Marian, though, Bonnie lass that she is, we were a bit disappointed, and I was quite beside myself with the blunder the clergy was making."

This set the table in an uproar of merriment; and then the nurse told of wedding customs in her country and Mrs. Pearson told of folk lore and customs in Scotland, and it was a very jolly crowd. Finally, as a surprise, all were told that the supposed cake boxes contained gifts, and there was much crinkling of paper and pleased "Ohs!" and "Ahs!" all around.

Marian and Robert had enjoyed selecting all the gifts and making them very personal; a lovely wrist watch for the nurse; a coveted chain and match case for Charlie; a breast pin and cuff pins for Mrs. Pearson; a full dress shirt set of pearls for Jack; while Robert had selected for Eleanor and Marian tiny jeweled vanity cases. Marian had put much thought on a gift for Robert, but finally had rushed a workman into making a lovely little pocket miniature off of a recent photo of her mother, so his was the greatest delight of all when he opened the tiny leather case and saw the sweet face of his bride looking out at him.

The supper over and the family sat alone in the living room, the nurse, declaring that Eleanor was well enough to stay up, only that she must not step on the injured ankle, so they sat in the firelight and talked of the future—together.

Jack and Marian must give up their work, as Jack was now full-fledged and could conduct a business of his own as his grandfather had wished. But first, they must take a vacation and it was of this that they talked that first evening.

The children would go back to Clairfield and look after a few necessary things while Eleanor was getting strong. Marian would see to having her mother's things packed and moved into the wing that had never been occupied here in this great house that Robert's father had built in the days after he had "struck it rich" in the mines. He had always wanted to please his gentleman wife, an Eastern girl who had come west to teach and stayed to marry a prospector and had stood by him in all the lean years. But his restless spirit had never been content in this quiet place and he had still wandered, appeasing his conscience by sending jewels and recklessly purchased gifts. Then, after his death, Robert and she had travelled, so the house was never furnished, only these few rooms. But now the old house would come to life and have its day.

Chapter XXXI

Two months later Eleanor and Marian stood on the deck of a great ocean liner looking down on the crowd. There were no "Good-byes," for there was none to leave. Even Charlie was going as far as England to spend some time with his sister. Marian suddenly noticed her mother's eyes were full of tears. "Surely not tears today, mother! I am happy enough to sing."

"They are not sad tears, Marian. I think I am just saying 'Good-bye' to Nelly Bingham and all the sadness of the past."

Robert and Jack joined them as she wiped away the last tear and Robert had quickly asked, "Why the tears, Eleanor?" Marian was quite on the job as usual and said: "Just a little too much happiness all in a heap and I've just told her that she had to buy oodles of pretty clothes, for I won't stand for any grand dame stealing my new dad."

Robert slipped his arm through one of his bride's and parried back: "And we are going to keep our eyes on you two also and let no one walk off with either of you for a while at least, until this family has had one grand and glorious time." (The end.)

For the best suggestion for a name for my new theatre, not over one word in addition to the word "Theatre", I will give a free pass good for two months. This suggestion must be made in a letter of not less than one hundred nor more than one hundred fifty words telling why Holly should have a moving picture theatre, and why the name proposed is best.
