The Message Must Go Through

Crews of men, along a gale-blasted road in Michigan, toiled in drifted snow, battling against a lashing wind. All about them broken poles—casualties of the storm—lay sprawled on the ground amid tangled copper wires. And every wire was heavily burdened with the telephone's arch-enemy—sleet.

At the first warning of this enemy, mobilization begins. Word is flashed through every department. All hold themselves in readiness. Repair trucks, fully manned, rush to the damaged area and the telephone storm troops go into action.

During such emergencies there can be no waiting for good weather; there can be no thought of cost or comfort in the work of restoring service promptly. The messages of Michigan subscribers must go through!

But it is not only in emergencies that the work of safeguarding the service is carried on. It is a year-round job. Millions of dollars are spent annually for new and improved equipment. Day by day rigid inspection and maintenance go forward.

Outdoors, patrolmen examine every foot of Michigan's aerial cable once a year. All long distance cable is tested regularly with the galvanometer, an instrument which can instantly detect a flaw and, even on a cable miles in length, locate that flaw almost to the foot.

Indoors, constant tests are made of all the intricate machinery of the modern central office. And the search for improvement moves steadily on, an endless search for equipment that shall be still more sturdy, still more efficient.

Neither trouble nor expense can be considered in the task of keeping open Michigan's copper lanes of speech; for today, as in the past, the guiding principle is the tradition which demands—fair or stormy, day or night—that the message must go through.
