AUTO INDUSTRY IS SOLVING PROBLEM

At Least Helping to Promote Safety on the Highways

Encouraged by definite progress made during the first 16 months of the united automotive industry's effort toward the solution of the fundamental problems of highway safety, nearly a hundred top ranking executives of the car, bus, truck, tire, accessory and finance companies completed the organization of the Automotive Safety Fundation at a dinner last evening in the Detroit Athletic Club.

Recognizing that control over the dual problems of safety and traffic congestion can be achieved only through a continuing and consistent plan of correlation of safety efforts and support for sound methods and techniques, the executives of the industry placed its highway safety program on a permanent basis.

A seven-point program developed over the past year will form the basis of the Foundation's activities, embracing: (1) Education (2) Traffic control administration (3) Legislation (4) Enforcement (5) Engineering (6) Technical personnel training and (7) Research, Specifically, the Foundation seeks adequate accident reporting and analysis, the training and employment of technical specialists in traffic engineering and police control, modernization of present roads and streets and the highest type of new construction consistent with available funds, raised levels of driving performance and pedestrian education and dissemination of information pertaining to the safe and efficient use of motor vehicles.

Wallace Beery is like a big; goodnatured, frolicsome St. Bernard puppy. He ambles onto the set, pushes back his hat, scratches his head squints one quizzical eye; and says, "Good mornin", everybody."

He selects a canvas chair with regard to its structural security, eases his massive frame into position, and relaxes with a contented sigh. This is accompanied by a sound of tortured fabric and creaking wood.

Director J. Walter Ruben comes over to welcome Beery.

"Congratulations," he says. "What for?" the other asks.

"This is your twenty-fifth anniversary picture," Ruben replies.

Beery begins to reminisce. sir, that was a long time ago, 1917. My first picture was 'Behind the Door.' I played the villain. Hobart Bosworth was the star."

Beery has been broke more times than he can remember. In the past twenty years he has made and lost three fortunes, coming back stronger than ever after each failure.

He was doing just so-so when talking pictures came in. Then he made "The Big House", and followed it with one smash hit after another, "Min and Bill", "Hell Divers", "The Champ". "Viva Villa!" and the allstar "Dinner at Eight."

"It's been a swell life." Beery grins. "I wouldn't change any of it." "All set," Cameraman Clyde De Vinna calls.

Beery walks into the role of Clem Hawley, the Good Old Soak. He plays a scene with Janet Beecher as his wife, Matilda. Clem is on carpet and he knows it. He acts like a bashful boy caught in the cookie jar. These two are old troupers. They were husband and wife in "The Mighty Barnum." The first "take" is perfect. Ruben gets another, "just for protec-

DRAIN COMMISSIONERS SEEK YEARLY AID FROM: W. P. A.

"It is felt," according to Hudson, "that drainage work should be on a year around basis and not just during the winter months as it has to a large extent in the past. any other project. I feel certain that if the matter is properly presented to Mr. Louis Nims, head of WPA, that he will agree with drain commissioners, that some consideration should be extended when weather conditions are favorable and more progress can be made during the winter months. Michigan has a total of 54 million dollars invested in county and intercounty drains built at the expense of local taxpayers, and these drains are absolutely necessary to drain lowland areas in flood time. Many of these drains are becoming clogged with brush, small trees and other debris.
