Stable Farm Plan Will Be Business Aid

An adequate and stable farm income for farms from a stable production of crops, which will in turn provide an aid for all business is one of the purposes of the national crop goals which will be set up under the 1938 Agricultural Conservation Program, says Mr. Robert McCrory of the Oakland County Agricultural Conservation Committee. Each farm is to have its own goals as part of the national goals. The "score cards" or appraisal sheets that have been prepared by farmer committeemen will aid in establishing these individual farm goals.

Agricultrue's immediate aim must be to produce, year after year insofar as possible, a volume of farm goods that is normally required by a growing population and that can be used by the available home and foreign markets at fair prices, Mr. McCrory explains.

At the same time farmers want to avoid the waste of soil and labor that goes into producing unmarketable surpluses. These surpluses mean losses to the farmer, and this almost always has an adverse influence on business conditions in general.

In determining the proper level at which production should be stabilized, Mr. McCrory gives several points that must be considered:

1. The need of soil conservation through efficient and economical land use, in order to preserve the productive power of the Nation's farm land for the future needs of the Nation. 2. The need of adequate and stable were back rooting for C. H. Mirrors entered the picture in Col man's rehearsals for the most diffi cult parts, those in which Rudolf and Rassendyll meet shake hands, and discuss matters both humorous and serious. To make sure that his reactoins to certain lines would differ from character to character, Colmar observed himself as he ran through each part. If changes in technique were needed, he made them.

"The king," explained Colman, "is sort of a light-hearted fellow without too much regard for his obligations, and quite a liking for wine. He greets things with a jest on his lips, sition brings.

"Rassendyll, on the other hand, more serious though ready in wit and with jest. He is daring, adventurous but quite level headed.

The actual placing of the two char acters on the screen at the same time, with their amazing exchange of greetings, is a carefully-guarded technical secret.
