Timely Advice to Breeders of Sheep

Suggestions on How to Care for Lambs

Lambs frisking in the April sunshine may be a beautiful and romantic sight, but they are a source of worry, headaches, and loss of sleep during the Michigan lambing season. That is the warning of A. C. Cole, of the Animal Husbandry department of Michigan State College.

Practices during the lambing season usually determine the sheepman's profit or loss for the season, Cole advises. To turn a risk into a dividend, certain things should be done.

Three or four weeks before the lambs are due, the ewes should receive from a half to a pound of cereal a day, and unless they are receiving legume hay, they should get an additional third pound daily of high protein concentrate. This will insure a supply of milk when the lambs arrive. After the lambs have arrived, however, the grain should be reduced for several days, and then gradually increased. When the lambs are two weeks old they will be able to eat grain and fine leafy hay. They should be given all they will eat.

At lambing time, Cole suggests, the ewe should be separated from the main flock, where she may remain quiet and undisturbed. Two four foot gates hinged together and set up in one corner of the barn work well. Quarters where the lamb is borne should be dry and free from drafts, as otherwise colds and pneumonia may develop. As soon as it is able to stand the lamb should get its stomach well-filled, and then it is fairly safe. A dry, well-fed newborn lamb can stand a good deal of cold.

As soon as possible the navel of the newborn lamb should be disinfected with iodine, and if the eyelids are turned under, they should be rolled out and treated with a 5% solution of argyrol.

The ewe herself may require some attention and assistance, and although this may entail some loss of sleep, it may also result in a large crop of lambs to supply meat and wool during the crisis.

When Conservation Officer William Le Mieux on routine patrol approached an ice fisherman on Brills lake, Jackson county, the excited angler gave him the line to hold while he ran to fetch an ice spud. Until the officer arrived to help, the fisherman had been playing a seven-pound pike through a hole in the ice that was so small he could not pull the fish through it.

UNCLE SAM'S SAILORS ON HORSEBACK SEE PANAMA FROM THE SADDLE

No, the U. S. Navy doesn't have a cavalry unit, but many a sailor straddled leather before giving up the bucking broncho or plow horse for the bounding main.

The sailors in whites above are seamen in the U. S. Naval Reserve on shore leave in Panama. No distinction is made between sailors in the regular Navy, and those in the regular Navy. Enlistment in the U. S. Naval Reserve is for four years, but all men enlisting in the Naval Reserve will be released to inactive duty as soon after the national emergency as their services can be spared, regardless of the length of time remaining in their enlistment. If the emergency ends within a period of several months, those enrolled in the Naval Reserve will not be required to complete their 4 year term in active service. Opportunities for advancement, to learn skilled trades, for travel and adventure are identical whether a man enlists in the regular Navy or the Naval Reserve, and his pay, food, clothing, medical and dental care are the same.

Conservation Notes

So great is the curiosity of the weasel that the rustling of a piece of paper at the mouth of a burrow may bring forth the occupant to investigate.

It is a common claim of many fur buyers that skunks raised in captivity usually have poor fur as compared with fur produced by skunks in the wild.

Farmers planning to restock some idle acreage with trees this spring are getting white pine seedlings at $4, red pine seedlings at $4 and jack pine seedlings at $2 a thousand from the conservation department's big nursery at Higgins lake, near Roscommon. White and red pine transplants stock also is available, at $7.50 a thousand.

Farm windbreaks and reforestation cover the extent of farm use of such stock, which may not be employed in ornamental plants, nor may it be cut before it is big enough to produce timber products. Orders must be for at least 500 trees. Those being accepted now at the Lansing office of the department's forestry division will be filled and shipped between April 15 and May 20.

Limited allotments of free seedlings for planting in school and community forests on publicly-owned land also are being ordered now. Maximum amount which may be obtained by any one public agency in any one year is 5,000. Most plantings are made in the spring. Spring planting is particularly recommended over fall planting in the southern part of the state.

Seeding stock of 10 kinds of trees and shrubs, of value because of the food and cover they produce for wildlife, may be obtained this spring from the forestry department of Michigan State College, East Lansing. Prices per 100 are: butternut, $1; chestnut,

$1; Japanese barberry, 40 cents; buffalo berry, Chinese arborvitae, Chinese elm, silver maple, sumac, wild crab, and ailanthus, 50 cents. Like conservation department pine stock, these seedlings also may not be used for ornamental planting.

The war has so slowed mail service from "down under" that requests from Canberra, Australia, for Michigan department of conservation forestry publications, mailed before the war began for the United States, are only now being received. The war has not halted such correspondence, however, as the most recent request from Honolulu is dated January 19, 1942.

A victory garden of a size that would be only a headache and a nuisance to a Michigan farmer may be a joy and a profitable venture to his city brother.

A half acre farm garden may be the most profitable land the owner has under cultivation, and the labor, sometimes considered tedious, need be only a little slower than that of other crops, if the garden is well laid out. This is the suggestion of Perry Bowser, extension specialist in horticulture at Michigan State College. Rows, he advises, should be laid out to permit easy cultivation with horse drawn or power drawn tools, thus requiring little hand cultivation.

The back yard garden of the city dweller, even though it be confined to a plot 25 x 25, or even 10 x 10 feet, may be the source of supply for the family vegetables. Such a small garden requires careful planning and cultivation, but it will pay large dividends in vitamin giving crops.

The farm garden, with its long rows will yield large amounts of vegetables for the table during summer and for canning, but the town gardener, with his small plot, and with intensive planting and cultivation can obtain even greater yields for the size of his garden.

The small garden should be divided into two parts—one for the early, quick maturing vegetables, such as radishes, spinach and lettuce, the other for beets and beans, carrots chard and turnips. Companion planting may well be practiced, too, by alternating rows of quick maturing vegetables and tomatoes.

Tomatoes, says Bowser, may well be a part of even the smallest garden, since staked, they take little room. And tomatoes, well staked, well tied, bearing a heavy burden of rich, red fruit may be as beautiful as flowers. Even the fences of a small garden can be put to good use as a trellis for climbing beans or squash.

One thing the town farmer as well as the rural farmer must remember. That is, to provide plenty of fertilizer and water. The distance between the rows makes little difference. They may be as little as one foot apart for small vegetables, but such close planting requires more plant food, more water.

If the city gardener plans well, plants well and cultivates thoroughly he can have an excellent supply of home and health defense food.

College Youth Majors In Michigan Apples

Apples are more than a favorite fruit to Ernest Denenfeld at Wayne University... they're part of his college course. He was the first man in the University brave enough to enroll in the Home Economics Department. Usually this is a "For Women Only" course . . . but not to Ernie. Food is a serious business to him. He comes by it naturally . . . his family is in the restaurant business, and very successfully in it. And Ernie means to make it his career, too.

HE LIKES APPLES! Ernie Denenfeld bakes some of those tempting apples in the Michigan apple display at Wayne U. . . . and does a good job of it. He's a real food enthusiast, the first male member of the Home Economics Department.

He had to take a good deal of teasing from the rest of the school at first, but the student body soon found out that food was as two-fisted a course as any other. It is a constant study of vitamins, minerals, and calories in food, as serious as work in a chemist's laboratory.

Ernie has proved himself very talented along food lines, and hopes, with luck, to be placed in the Quartermaster's Corps when he joins the Army. If he is fortunate enough to get his wish, you can be sure the boys in his care will be well fed. And we have a hunch that he'll slip lots of big, juicy Michigan apples into their diet.

New Huron Oats Show Well in Michigan

Yield Compares Favorably With Other New Varieties

Michigan's new Huron oat in Lower Peninsula commercial production for four years withstands the competition presented by new varieties well adapted to other states where they originated.

That is the conclusion of men in the farms crop department at Michigan State College after yield tests were made in plots where the Huron variety was compared with other varieties which were rated early, smut and rust resistant.

Iowa and Wisconsin plant breeders developed new varieties of oats and brought them out in their states. In Michigan the new Huron was developed under the direction of E. E. Down and introduced in 1937.

Plot tests conducted in 1941 by Down and J. W. Thayer, Jr., convinced the Michigan State College men that within this state the heavykerneled smut resistant Huron variety yields better on the average and offers a higher test weight than the out-of-state varieties known as Hancock, Marion, Boone and Vicland.

No argument with plant breeders in other states is contemplated, Down insists. He merely supports his faith in the Huron variety with actual test plot figures comparing yields and test weight. He admits the other varieties probably produce better than Huron oats grown in other states, but not in Michigan.
