should do is to apologize for not writing before. I've been meaning to write a dozen times but there was always something else to do so I would put it off until later, but this time I am going through with it.

I've been moved to a different place so I have a new APO again. I am stationed at a place called Tidworth Barracks. It is in the southern part of England about forty miles from Southampton. It is an infantry training center for tellows that have been drafted Clarkston Locals from the Air Corps and other service forces. We are here to take care of their "blisters and bunions" and there are plenty of them. I've heard fellows in the service forces complain about not liking their particular job, but when they get in the infantry they realize what a snap they had before and wish that they were "Blue Star Commondos" again.

I ran into Lyle Walker in London about six weeks ago and he sure looks nice in his officer's miform. I didn't have much of a chance to visit with him but it sure was good to see someone from home for a change. The weather really gets warm down here during the day, but it always cools off at night. The cooling off at night makes it really allright for sleeping. The part of Texas that I am in isn't very nice but I guess they do have some nice places in this state. We have a high wind here most of the time and a lot of dust storms. I contend that this is the only place in the world where a person could stand up in mud to his knees and still have sand blow in his eyes. Well, I hear P. reveal that the 126th, commanded by Lt. Col. Horace M. Robbins, of Bamidji, Minn is one of the two American 90-mm gun battalions which served in the defense of both Antwerp and London. Many of the tactics developed by the 126th during the defense of London were employed in setting up the defense which protected Antwerp from a 154-day attack lasting from October 1944 to April of this year.

The 126th, composed of men from 46 states and trained principally in California, was one of five battalions deployed with the British units along the English channel coast during the German attempts to destroy London by some 8000 flying bombs. Its batteries occupied positions on the Cliffs of Dover. It was one of 16 American battalions which were established in a secret Anglo-American defense known only by the code name "Antwerp X" under the command of American Brigadier General Clare H. NOW GMC MUST BUILD MORE OF THESE WITAL WERIGLES

If you have a war job, stick to it! If you haven't, get a job at GMC. Employment Office at 661 South Boulevard, Pontiac, is open from 8:15 A.M. to 5:30 P.M. Monday through Saturday.

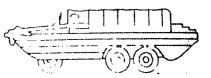

Part boat, part truck, the GMC "Duck" is the most versatile transport vehicle of the war! In addition to hauling huge loads of men and matériel between battleships, beachheads and battle lines, the "Duck" has performed scores of amazing fighting front assignments that it, alone, could do! The photograph above illustrates only one of them.

Now that action is being stepped-up in the Pacific, the Army is asking GMC Truck & Coach to step-up its "Duck" production. This makes it doubly important for every GMC worker aiding in the "Duck's" manufacture to stick to his job. It makes it imperative, too, that GMC obtain more workers to help build more "Ducks." Be patriotic and apply for a job that will give our fighters the vehicles needed for a quicker victory.

BEFORE the war, Michigan Bell was making real progress in reducing the number of telephones per rural line. But because there are so many more rural folks with telephones today, and because war has prevented expansion of the system, most lines are serving more families.

Even so, if everyone will "share the line" with typical American friendliness and consideration, you and all your telephone neighbors will enjoy better service. These three simple rules will go a long way in the right direction:

- Please keep all calls short.
- 2 Please do not listen in or interrupt when the line is in use.
- 3 Please be sure to hang up your receiver. One receiver off the hook can tie up a whole line.
