Burning doesn't take too much manual labor, but in Michigan stumps are rarely dry enough to burn very well. That's especially true this spring. Other methods include digging them out, hauling them out, bulldozing them out, and blowing them out with dynamite. Each of these solutions to the problem has its drawbacks and you'll want to investigate each in relation to your own circumstances. Just remember that you

MRS. CAROLYN IRWIN and her husband, Thomas, live in a pleasant year-round cottage on Lakeville Lake, east of Oxford. Like many another young couple, they plan to build their own home and are studying various house plans. In community service, he is a volunteer fireman and she belongs to the auxiliary.

Some people seem to be born with a smile in their voices. Mrs. Carolyn Irwin is surely one of them. She has received compliments on her voice from telephone subscribers.

Mrs. Irwin handles out-of-town calls from this community to places which you do not dial yourself. She handles emergency calls, too, and sends help, for example, when excited people call in about a fire on a farm, a flooded basement, or an injured child.

Twenty-one years old, Carolyn Irwin is the kind of happy-to-be-helpful person we have in mind when we say: "It's people who make your telephone service good,"
