WEATHER BALLOONS NOT A RARITY

From time to time the weather Bureau, for scientific reasons, sends up balloons with parachutes attached carrying boxes containing apparatus for securing data of value to the bureau. As these balloons get into a high altitude they burst and the box when found is mailed back to the nearest station for further study. This last week, Bradley Miller, while fox hunting, saw something hanging in a tree and called the State Police. It turned out to be one of these boxes.
