Sashabaw Church Restores Steeple

The Sashabaw Presbyterian Church of Clarkston has recently completed the project of restoring the steeple to its original house of worship.

Sashabaw Presbyterian Church began as the "Church of Orion and Independence" in 1830. In 1843 it transferred to the Presbyterian denomination and became part of the Presbytery of Detroit. It was then known as the First Presbyterian Church of Independence. The resent building was erected in 1856. It is the second oldest of (Beardslee) Reed, deceased and the Presbyterian structures in

One year ago a full time pastor was called to the Sashabaw Church to lead the church in meeting the needs of the growing community, and to provide a traditional Presbyterian Church program for the area.

In the fall of 1957 a substantial gift was made to the church for the restoration of its steeple. A committee was appointed to promote the project and members of the Sashabaw Cemetery Association were approached as to their interest and support. Within a few months, members of the Association, along with the Westminster Fellowship of the church had contributed the amount needed to reconstruct the steeple. Plans are to install a lighting system so that the steeple may be lighted at night, and an electronic sound system for the belfry.

The members of the committee for the restoration of the steeple were Mrs. Raymond Gates, Mrs. and the pastor, the Rev. Cliford H. Haskins.

Sashabaw Presbyterian Church, located at 5331 Maybee Road, is one of the few remaining churches in the state built in The happiness, the love, and trust architecture. The "old" has been That kept God's presence ever preserved along with serving in an up to date way. This might be symbolized in the presence of the cemetery on the west side of the church, dating back to the 1830's, and the new Sashabaw elementary school on the east side of the church.
