With the din of pheasant and deer seasons silenced for another year, the sound of echoing shots and barking hounds tell Br'er Rabbit's famous ears that hunters have again swung their sights his way. This renewed popularity promises to keep his fluffy tail bobbin until the season ends March 1 For years, he has been Michigan's leading game animal in the hunters' bag and this season should be no exception. Mail carrier counts from the Conservation Department's summer survey indicate that cottontails have made a 34-percent population jump in southern Michigan since last season. Their numbers appear the same or higher in the northern lower peninsula.
