Household Cleansers can be very harmful

A 37 year old Boston housewife cleaned her kitchen floor one eveing just before dinner time with a mixture of household cleaners. commercial bleach and vinegar. Shortly after dinner the entire family became ill, with nausea, headaches, dizziness and coughing. Fortunately, everyone recovered.

What happened? In mixing the bleaches and the vinegar, this lady inadventently released some chlorine gas in her small, tightly closed kitchen. The meral is simple. Be very cat icut about mixing two or more powerful cleansers, such as are used for ovens and toilet bowls; mixing them with each other or with household ammonia or vinegar. Junt because each cleanser is relatively safe when used alone doesn't necessarily mean it's also safe in mixtures The strong cleansers often are tricky to use. The package labels on can, bettle or carton include explicit directions for proper and safe use. The labels point out the potential dangers. The problem is that many householders have become so familiar with the common cleansers that they no longer bother to read the labels.

The danger of mixing household cleansers is not a major health problem, but is serious enough to warrant attention. A recent report in a medical journal showed that during a period of sixty days in the winter of 1963, 45 calls were received at the Boston Poison Information Center regarding adult poisoning. Four of these were for inhalation of gases produced by homemade cleaning mixtures.

The most common homemade mixtures, said the Boston report, are those using sodium hypochlorite and ammonta or vinegar. Sodium hypochlorite and vinegar react and produce chlorine gas. Mixed with ammonia, sodium hypochlorite gives off arritating sases.

Such incidents occur more frequently in winter, when houses are closed and ventilation is at a minimum, but thy can and do occur any time. Cleaning any poorly vented space, such as an oven, carries a certain risk.

Of course, millions of housewives can testify that there's no harm in adding a chlorine blead laundry detergents and scap in doing the family wash. However, like other household chemical, chlorine bleach should be used strictly according to the directions on the

The problem of the dangers of mixing various cleaning agents has only recently come to the attention of the health authorities,, and the package labels sometimes do not include specific warnings. To be completely sure, don't mix, unless you're absolutely certain that you understand enough elementary chemistry to know what you're do-

The Cafeteria brings back memories to any boy who took his girl to the Homecoming Dance.

How could they ever forget the very appropriate theme, "Some Enchanted Evening"?

Yes, the Homecoming Dance was a dance to remember in more ways than one. Despite our boys' efforts, it turned out to be our only football victory dance.

Even though it isn't in the school, our football fileld holds memoriles of the cold nights we cheered for our wolves. There is one room, more than the classrooms. The auditorium is being used for classes now. also. The Junior U.S. History classes are held there. There are three teachers con-
