One year ago May 8 on a balmy Friday afternoon literally minutes after Northville schools were dismissed an army jet plunged into the ground some 200 feet from school playgrounds. And while it was proclaimed a "miracle" that the pilotless craft didn't cause greater damage and loss of life, the fact remains two children were badly burned and hospitalized for many weeks.

David and Beth King have undergone series of skin graftings; they still face the ordeal of plastic surgery. While no amount of money lessens the strain that parents feel when their children are seriously burt, the lack of available funds for the heavy expense is one more concern. In the case of Police Chief and Mrs. Eugene King no govern ment settlement has been reached as yet. It is my understanding that an appropriation bill may be introduced in the United States house of representtives in the near future. There could be further delays. Legal complications always enter into matters of this kind. Reaching an agreement on the amount of settlement is never easy. It may be true that in our community it is not terribly difficult for a well-known and respected family to meet a financial situation of this kind. I understand that many citizens and local organizations have pledged assistance. Still, in the age of increasing air travel, rockets, missiles and other flying objects, it seems reasonable that where the government is involved at least, some "emergency" fund should be established to provide immediate relief until a final settlement can be reached. I am aware that from a legal standpoint this suggestion might appear unadvisable. In matters like this, the usual advice is "don't sign anything."

But there will be other days like May 8, 1959 in other communities where volunteer assistance may not be readily available. And while providing temporary emergency funds - with no interest or "strings" attached - may be a small part indeed in the total problem surrounding such incidents, it would eliminate one worry. The greatest effort, of course, should be directed at correcting conditions that permit these accidents to happen.

It's that time of year again when counties and the state begin determining what our assessed valuations will be for the new year. As you know by now (but each year it's easy to forget) the process works something like this:

First the local assessing authority sets down what the property assessments should be: Then the county takes a look and applies the old equalization

Finally, the state takes its turn at bat and another factor is applied, higher (naturally) than the county determination Here's the story currently circulating in tax circles:

This year the state will seek a 13 percent "across the board" ncrease in assessed valuations If it is allowed, this simply means that the state equalized assessed valuation of all property would be 13 percent higher

Thus, if our assessments are unchanged otherwise, and our school and county millage rate remained the same, we could expect a 13 percent tax boost on this basis.

It might not happen, but in pure theory, it could CONSUMERS

Reactions to Economies
Reactions to these plans have been voiciferous in their opposition. They argue that students are not to be shaped on a production line as chunks of metal are milled and bored for engine blocks. The large lecture hall, educators rightly contend, would then become little more than a means for transferring the professor's notes to the students' notebooks. A college education is not just cramming the mind with facts about history or science or business. There must be reaction by students; where there is no reaction, there is no learning. Ideas must be chewed, digested, assimilated into the students' soophy. To effect this reaction an instructor must challenge his students' stept to their questions.

Color Contrasting To Re-Shape Room

Don't worry about "fashion" when you consider whether or not to nake one wall in your living room contrast with the other three walls. The one consideration is "What will it do for the room?" Announcement last week of the assessments as determined by Wayne county stirred little more than casual interest in local tax-

It created a storm in other communities - such as Livonia and Plymouth where the county boosted the local assessments by approximately 30 and 12 percent, respectively.

Basically, the reason, of course, is that in the city and township of Northville complete reappraisal programs have been undertaken to bring properties up to more realistic valuations.

new assessments on property and then hoping for the best when county and state "equalization factors" are announced.

Evidence of this fact is the substantial reduction in equalization received this year by the township.

Last year township assessments on land were increased by $750,000 by the county resulting in an equalization factor of 1.09. This year the county increase was only $281,000, for a six percent drop to a factor of 1.03.

To the school and county taxpayer, this "factor" is an important figure. Eventually, (later this summer) the state will apply its own factor to the county figure and then this final "state equalization factor" determines the valuation of property for the purpose of applying the millage levy.

For example, if the state should boost county assessments by 10 percent, this added to the three percent applied by the county to township assessments would result in a 13 percent hoost in local assessments. School and county millage is then applied against this valuation to determine the individual tax hill.

The trick, therefore, is to keep assessments on property in equal proportion to each other and close enough to the state level to avoid high equalization.

The responsibility for this chore falls upon the assessor and hoard of review in the respective communities. By coincidence both the city and township came up with identical county factors. The city had the same factor last year; but for the township the reduction represents hours of work, conferences and a parcel-by-parcel inspection of some 900 pieces of property. Supervisor George Clark and board of review members Ralph Gibson and Donald Robinson were convinced that in certain instances the county had taken an "unrealistic" viewpoint of the property values in the township. In some cases, the local officials had to admit that their appraisals were low.

The result of the sessions with county tax officials was a compromise where in many specific cases the township raised its appraisal of $300 per acre and the county lowered its $600 assess-

Clark, Gibson and Robinson studied recent sales of township land, talked to property owners, compared other areas and then took their arguments to the county tax officials.

After these sessions the township received a net total reduction of $441,740 in land assessments. Some equalization remains, of course, because complete agreement on land values could not be reached. But the township made a giant stride forward toward gaining true equity for its
