Last week we found that African American women, who migrated North during and after slavery, found their first professional successes in Detroit and other similar northern cities as teachers. These women knew that they would have to make their own opportunities and fight for equality each step of the way. White women, of course, were waging a battle for equality during this era as well, but women of color not only had to fight on behalf of their gender, but their race as well.

In order to work more effectively, both white and black women founded organizations. White women founded The Michigan State Federation of Women's Clubs, which helped care for needy women and children and also helped pave the way for women to enter the work force. Excluded from the white Federation, African American women formed the National Association of Colored Women's Clubs (NACWC) in 1904. Their goals were ultimately the same as their white sisters, to help the needy and further the position of women in society. In 1900, D. Augustus Straker, an African American attorney and political leader in Detroit, addressed the first national convention of the NACWC. He said, "I hope before you close your labors you will establish a committee in every city of the state to get employment for our young women and thus protect them against the evil results of idle hands. What you need to do is to create American sentiment for equal opportunity for women in the development of true womanhood. Open the stores and the factories, and the millineries and the school houses and the counting houses for our young women, as well as the kitchen, the washtub, the nursery and the scrub room..."

Lyme patients deal with the unexpected

With new results of a Lyme disease study showing a prevalence of the devastating illness in southeastern Michigan, those in Clarkston who now live with it spread the word about prevention.

As Julie Finney picked a tick off her ankle while on vacation five years ago, she never imagined it would become the defining moment of her vacation.

It was that tick bite in Georgia that infected the Clarkston resident with Lyme disease.

Eight out of 100,000 individuals are infected with Lyme disease annually. For Finney, symptoms initially resembled the flu. She didn't know then how one tick would alter her life.

Lyme disease, discovered in Old Lyme, Conn., in 1975 is an acute inflammatory disease characterized by skin changes, joint inflammation and flu-like symptoms. It is caused by the bacterium Borrelia burgdorferi, and transmitted by deer ticks. Deer and mice are the most commonly infected animals that act as hosts to the tick, though more than 50 species of birds may also carry it.

The ticks can infect people even while in their smallest stage — as larvae — which are less than one millimeter in size.

The one that bit Finney, however, was larger, probably an adult. The second doctor she visited tested her for Lyme disease. When the tests came back positive, he did an additional test to confirm she had it.

"He said I was pretty deep into it after only one month," said Finney. "I don't have a good immune system to begin with."

She is not alone.

Lyme disease has been reported in at least 47 states. During the spring and It's warm. It's colorful. And maybe most refreshing of all, it's funky. The Greek Revival-style home that Carol and Larry Eberhardt own on Washington Street doesn't just stand there staring blankly at passersby.

This historic house sports a mossy green paint job with teal accents, for Pete's sake. It winks.

Carol Eberhardt says her eye-catching home simply reflects the personalities, experiences, needs and interests of the people living in it — not some decorate-by-number page from a glossy magazine.

"It's one thing to have an absolutely, drop-dead gorgeous house," Eberhardt said recently. "But if it doesn't suit your lifestyle, so what?"

When the eclectic, yet functionally designed house was first featured on the Clarkston Home Tour in 1990, the Clarkstonite said she heard many positive comments about it. Mostly, visitors said it looked and felt like a place where "real people" live.

Now, nine years later, the abode with attitude is back on the tour, revamped and ready to charm another crowd of house-trekkers.

Along with a new upstairs addition, the interior of the home boasts a warm, but striking, hunter green and purple color scheme; new wallpaper designs; and an eclectic mix of Mission, American folk, contemporary and African

Her dedication to the non-profit agency that assists residents in 12 neighboring communities has earned her the Citizen of the Year award as part of the Community Awards presented by Clarkston Area Chamber of Commerce.

"She's a gal Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday," commented Janice Herr-Krevin, the senior caregiver specialist at the Clarkston office of Lighthouse. "She's a very responsible volunteer who shows up every Monday and assists me with many things. In fact, I keep adding responsibilities to her list and I haven't taken any away yet." Herr-Krevin has worked at the Clarkston site for three years.

summer months, ticks are most active in the Northeast and Midwest United States.

Southeast Michigan

According to the results of a veterinary research study that tracked Lyme disease in dogs during 1996-97, researchers found that 3.4 percent of the canines randomly sampled have tested positive for Lyme disease. The dogs were healthy animals who had not been exposed to endemic areas. Funded by the Michigan Lyme disease Association, the study focused on Oakland, Wayne, Macomb and Livingston counties. It involved 40 veterinarians and 1,399 blood samples. Dogs were chosen for testing due to their reliable immune system responses.

The results contrasted with a canine study completed in 1993 which showed 0.1 percent of the dogs in the lower peninsula tested positive. Linda Lobes, president of the Michigan Lyme disease Association, said the recent test is a lot more extensive.

"I do feel there needs to be more education," she said. "More doctors need to be educated on Lyme disease." Lobes took over a Lyme disease support group that serves south Oakland and Macomb counties. She has 156 members at this time. The group spawned a second branch for northern Oakland County, organized by Clarkston resident Carol Fisch.

"We're really proud of this study," said Lobes. "It definitely proves we have a prevalence of Lyme disease in southeast Michigan."

While Lobes admits that not all of her group members contracted the disease in Michigan, she said at least 17 of them were bitten in the same general area in Michigan. She contracted Lyme disease herself 10 years ago. It took three years and a trip to New York before she was diagnosed. Today, Lobes avidly works toward educating others about protection and prevention of the disease. She doesn't want anybody to suffer as she did.

"I was told to make out my last will and testament," she said. "I don't want anybody to go through that."

Now that she's feeling better, Lobes works to help others help themselves.

National awareness month

Lyme disease is difficult to diagnose. It sometimes shows up in its primary stage as a red "bulls eye"-shaped rash at the site of the tick bite. The lesion may expand to several inches over a period of several days. Other symptoms include fever, headaches, lethargy, muscle pain and a stiff neck.

As part of National Lyme disease Awareness Month, Julie Finney hopes to educate and protect others by sharing her story.

After four months of intravenous treatment, doctors told Finney she was cured. Her treatment stopped, but she knew something wasn't right. Not only did her Lyme symptoms return, treatment for the disease had taken such a toll on her body that her gall bladder gave out. Doctors later inserted a catheter into Finney's elbow that extended through a vein and into her heart. This allowed her to take intravenous doses of medication at home once or twice a day. When that was no longer suitable therapy, she had to endure a "central line" that inserted medication from her chest directly to her heart.

At one point, Finney was hospitalized and placed in intensive care due to complications related to her condition. Though she went into remission, trauma from surgery and from daily stresses brings her symptoms on again. She was laid off from her job as a bookkeeper.

"Stress really affects this disease," said Finney.

She said she's worried that people will take the disease too lightly when they hear about it for the first time. Though she caught it early, it has still been devastating to her health and impacted her life.

"I wish people were more careful about prevention," she said. "You can't be sure. I didn't even feel the tick."

Now that time has passed, Finney said, she doesn't receive the amount of support she did in the beginning.

"After five years, they don't care anymore," she said. "I try not to act sick all the time. I do my own housework. I'm exhausted. They don't see it (the symptoms). I think the hardest thing is you live with it everyday and other people forget about it."

Devastating results

Carol Fisch would like to see more doctors educated in Lyme disease.

"I have one goal in life — to get the state to recognize it," said Fisch.

If Lyme is detected within six weeks of contracting the bacteria, it is usually treatable. But since only 60 percent of individuals who have the disease will get the bulls eye rash, it isn't easy to detect.

"It's a very small culprit that does so much harm," said Fisch.

Lobes said the development of areas like Clarkston can be attributed to this growing problem.

"We're taking away the tick's habitat, and the deer's habitat, and we're moving in," she said.

Prevention

Julie Finney won't hike in sandals again, but she worries that family members aren't taking preventative measures.

"My whole family has watched this and they still are not careful," she said. "They still have the mindset that 'it won't happen to me.'"

Tick habitats include tall grass, bushes, brush and wooded areas. When walking or hiking in areas that may be tick-infested, tuck pant legs into socks and wear light-colored clothing that makes it easy to detect the dark-colored ticks. Shoes, insect repellent and long-sleeved shirts also provide protection. Brush off clothing before going inside.

If a tick does land on you, use fine-point tweezers or a tick-removing device and pull carefully and steadily to remove it. Grasp near the mouth-parts of the ticks.

The Michigan Lyme disease Association recommends saying the tick in a covered bottle with a blade of grass and drop of water. Write the date of the bite and location of the tick. You may send it to MLDA, 53001 Baker, New Baltimore, MI 48047. Lobes said she receives 300 calls a week inquiring about the illness and samples of the ticks.

Not all ticks carry the bacteria that causes Lyme disease, and not all carriers will transmit it to a host.

Is it Lyme?

The red bulls-eye shaped rash that characterizes Lyme disease is not the only indicator. In 40 percent of the infected individuals, the rash appears, usually within one to four weeks after the tick bite. The rash may not appear in the area where an individual is bitten.

Other symptoms include fatigue, headache, neck stiffness, jaw discomfort, swollen glands, reddening of the eyes.

If left untreated, Lyme disease will affect the heart and could cause dizziness, weakness, inflammation of the muscle, chest pain and an irregular heartbeat.

Neurological symptoms can include meningitis; inflammation of the brain, spinal chord, nerve network; seizures; hearing loss; partial paralysis; and spasmodic movements. Other symptoms can affect vision, memory, concentration and muscular use.

One thing Finney's learned through this is that she isn't at fault.

"I do not feel guilty," she said. "Also, don't push yourself too hard. Learn to pace yourself. You know what you're able to do."

Dog owners — watch for symptoms

BY SUSAN B. TAUBER
STAFF WRITER
staubercoe/homecomm.net

"Dog owners need to be aware that their pet can contract Lyme disease the same way people get it — by being bitten by a tick.

The disease is very rare in cats but much more common in dogs, according to Dr. Bryan Cornwall of the Independence Animal Hospital.

Cats have a more natural resistance than dogs. If they do contract Lyme disease, it shows up as arthritis or meningitis.

Lyme disease in dogs is much more complicated. Dogs don't get a skin rash like people do, but there are noticeable symptoms. These include a shifting lameness causing a dog to limp in one leg one day and another leg another day, joint swelling, enlarged lymph nodes, appetite loss, kidney disease and myocarditis, which affects the heart.

If a pet owner suspects any of these symptoms, he or she should get the dog into a veterinarian's office as soon as possible.

"Lyme disease is very difficult to diagnose. It's hard to isolate the bacteria," Dr. Cornwall said. Veterinarians conduct an antibody test to see if the dog has been exposed to Lyme disease. "We look at increased antibodies and determine if the animal has a history of being exposed to ticks or has been in an area where it could be exposed. If it responds to the antibiotics we prescribe, then we determine the dog had Lyme disease.

He stressed that the pet owner must keep the animal on the antibiotics for 30 days without interruption.

Independence Animal Hospital participated in a veterinary research study funded by the Michigan Lyme disease Association during 1996-97. The study determined that Lyme disease is much more widespread in southeast Michigan than was originally thought. It involved 40 veterinarians who submitted almost 1,400 blood samples from randomly selected dogs in Oakland, Wayne, Macomb and Livingston counties.

The results found 3.4 percent of the dogs tested positive to Lyme disease, a marked increase from an earlier study in which only 0.1 percent of the dogs in the lower peninsula tested positive.

Lyme disease is caused by a bacteria passed on by the bite of a deer tick. This type of tick is about the size of a sesame seed. If pet owners have dogs that walk through wooded areas, or if a dog is accompanying its owner to a wooded area for camping, hiking or hunting, there are some things the owners can do to prevent tick bites.

Cornwall recommends a vaccine that's been available for about 10 years.

"We don't recommend it for every dog but for those with the lifestyle where they might be exposed to ticks, it does work," he said.

Another suggestion is to use products that prevent the ticks from being attached to the dog for 48 hours — the amount of time it takes for the tick to transmit the disease to the animal. He said the best product is a Preventic collar. The second recommended product is Frontline. It comes in two forms, a spray and a stick.

He also said owners can inspect their dogs for ticks but they're so small, chances are they won't be detected on the animal.

"If you do find one, don't use your bare hands to get it off. Put on a pair of gloves or use tweezers. If you do remove a tick, drop it in some alcohol to kill it."

Cornwall said pet owners shouldn't worry about getting the disease from their dogs.

"It's not transmittable from a dog to a person. Dogs get the disease the same way people do, by being bitten by the tick," he explained.

As recently reported on NBC Dateline, these exterior finish systems, usually applied to look like stucco, are susceptible to moisture problems, resulting in cracks, leaks and structural deterioration. When present, these problems are often latent, concealed beneath the surface for years. EFIS problems are frequently caused by defects in the application process and/or the system design.

Making water a way of life: Kinetico comes to Clarkston

STEPHANIE ANGELYN CASOLA
AFF WRITER
asola@oe.homecomm.net

Jeff Taylor finds himself deep water these days.

As a newly employed sales presentative for Kinetico by llage and Country Water, Tay- spends his days surrounded pure water and supplies at e company's newest location — Clarkston.

One word Taylor's heard more an once since the store opened st month is arsenic. Residents ave stopped in with questions nd concerns about arsenic in eir water.

Arsenic has been discovered in uantities that exceed maximum ontaminant levels in parts of larkston and Independence ownship, according to informa- on released by Oakland County ast December. Though it is a aturally occurring element, igh quantities of arsenic have een linked to stomach and ntestinal pain, nausea, vomit- ng, diarrhea, fatigue, abnormal eart rhythm, a numbness in he hands and feet, and skin hanges.

The current standard for rinking water is 0.05 mil- igrams of arsenic per liter of vater. It was adopted by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency. The World Health Orga- ization has recommended educing the guideline to 0.01 nilligrams per liter of water.

"Most (people) have been hav- ng problems with the communi- y water," said Taylor. "Appar- ently it's really bad. People real- ly care about their water. Arsenic has come up quite a few times."

For concerned residents, Kinetico can offer peace of mind.

"We offer free at-home water tests," said Taylor. "We can go to your home, test out your water and make sure it's safe."

Anyone may bring in samples of their water for free testing, or may request a free water analy- ses at a home or office.

While representatives are able to customize a water system for a household or business that needs one, Taylor said they "won't press anyone into using us."

Water talk: Jeff Taylor, sales representative for Kinetico Water Quality Systems, tells of the benefits of soft water.

STAFF PHOTOS BY STEVE CANTRELL

Kelly Thompson, sales trainer and recruiter, explained the benefits of having water tested for hardness and minerals.

Hard water is defined by the amount of inorganic material dissolved into the water. Hard water may have a high concentration of iron, calcium or magnesium, for example. Taylor said hard water will damage piping, appliances, even clothing.

"If you have a hard water problem, a lot of people don't really know what it's like (to have soft water)," said Taylor.

Thompson estimated that 85 percent of American homes do have hard water. A water softener eliminates impurities in water and is safer for everyday use, according to Kinetico representatives.

"We're trying to get the Kinetico name known in Oakland County," said Taylor of the store's new location.

While the store has been opened since mid April, Kinetico will host a grand opening celebration today through Saturday to welcome the public. It will be held 9 a.m. to 7 p.m. today and Friday and 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Saturday at the new facility, 5926 Ortonville Road.

The company offers bottled water, water coolers, water softener systems and filters. The cost varies widely depending upon the system, size of the family, and amount of water usage.

"It can be adjusted to fit a family almost perfectly," said Taylor, who's lived in a home with a Kinetico system for 12 years. "The more it's set to your needs, the better it works and it's gonna save you money."

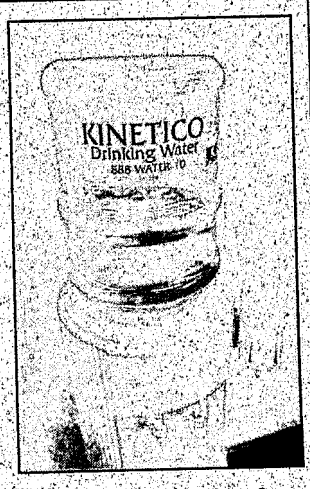

The company uses a twin tank system that is self-metered and does not use electricity. It requires half the amount of salt for filtering than other systems.

The systems use resin beads to attract particles such as iron, like a magnet, and separate it from the pure water. With soft water, bathing and cleaning requires about 75 percent less soap, Thompson said.

"It's definitely more healthy," said Taylor of soft water.

The public is welcome to stop in and learn more about Kinetico this weekend. Food, refreshments and prizes will be available each day. Prizes include salt for softener systems, bottled water and a washer and dryer. The business will also give away one Kinetico Drinking Water Filter and one bottled water cooler each day. Visitors can register to win the grand prize — a Kinetico whole house water treatment package.

For more information, call Kinetico at 1-888-WATER10 (928-3710).

Eberhardt, a risk-taker with a background in graphic design and a strong sense of identity, refers to the house as a passionate, evolving work — much like her life.

A lot has changed in nine years. The couple's three children are grown — only one college-age son lives at home when school's not in session. And Carol Eberhardt's job as a local Realtor has moved from a real estate office to her home.

To accommodate the shift, the couple cut the roof off the back of their home two years ago, converting a cramped attic into a spacious home office with lots of windows and an attached full bathroom. From that room, Carol Eberhardt now works her day job, dabbles in stained-glass artistry and performs her administrative duties as chairman of Habitat for Humanity.

She said she designed her office with comfort and nurturing in mind. For its part, the room more than obliges. White sheer curtains dotted with stars adorn grand windows that look out over bucolic neighborhood backyards. A rustic twig lounger with a green and purple-print cushion extends a welcome from one side of the room. A whimsical, contemporary sun clock and an off-beat picture of Three Blind Mice grace an opposite wall. Traditional African dolls from Senegal — a gift from Eberhardt's African son-in-law — stand at attention in a corner. And, of course, a desk and computer — and a nifty office supply storage closet — exist within that realm.

It's definitely a different kind of home office.

But "different" doesn't end there.

"When people come here from nine years ago, they're going to see literally an entirely different house," Eberhardt remarked. "With the exception of the dining room wallpaper and the laundry room wallpaper, everything is completely different."

She bagged lacy window curtains and put up blinds. She ditched bright colors and opted for richer hues. She went for a simpler look — one that echoed a simpler life.

A do-it-herselfer, the homeowner admitted, however, that a simpler life isn't always easy to achieve. Eberhardt refinished all of the house's original hardwood floors and she removed carpeting on the foyer stairway to expose the same natural wood richness there. She painted or wallpapered every room in her home. She painted and repainted furniture.

And outside her home, she erected a white picket fence.

When she wasn't involved in the physical part of home improvement, Eberhardt concentrated on interior space. An easier task, she decided to organize some rooms in the house so that they would spotlight her many photographs and collections.

In the kitchen, the Clarkstonite used her penchant for cooking and her love of restaurant ware to create an unusual, yet functional display. All of her dishes, cups and saucers sit in open stacks along a large wooden shelf that's attached to a wall.

"I wanted an open shelf similar to what a diner has, so when I'm cooking, I can quickly pull off dishes," she explained. "It's also a way to quickly set the table if someone's here."

The custom wooden shelf that Eberhardt's friend built for her kitchen was perfect, she said, except for one detail. She wanted the brand-new piece to look like it had been pulled off of the wall of an old house.

To get that look, the homeowner said she spent two days brushing six layers of paint and wood putty on the shelf, with applications of stain in-between. Then she sanded the piece, torched it and let the paint run. Voila! Instant antique.

Above her folksy wooden kitchen furniture and her assorted collectibles — salt and pepper shakers, gravy boats and tea pots, to name a few — Eberhardt chose to light the room with ... what else? White contemporary track lights.

Somehow, they work.

As history shows, lots of people and things have come and gone in this house. Maybe that's why its current purple accents, terra cotta-colored stairs, track lighting and faux finishes don't seem to ruffle its shingles.

Built at around the turn of the century, Eberhardt said the house first stood on Main Street, where Morgan's Gas Station is today. It served as home to a local doctor, but when the physician died at a fairly young age, his widow began renting out some of the rooms to school teachers.

In 1920, the home was transplanted to East Washington Street, she said. There, it became the town telephone office and home to the telephone operator and her two sons. During that time, the operator made Eberhardt's present-day living room and den into the telephone office's equipment room.

After a fire damaged the back of the house in 1938, the phone family moved out. A year or two later, the house was reconverted to a single family residence. And in 1982, Eberhardt and her family moved in.

For the next eight years, she and her husband worked to restore the gem's brilliance. Perhaps it's no wonder that the home boasts jewel tones today.

"It's a house with character," Eberhardt said. "I don't get real anal about getting everything perfect. We just tweak it as our lifestyle changes."

Distinctive homes featured

Five impressive homes will be included in Clarkston Home Tour 17, which takes place Saturday and Sunday, June 5-6.

The tour is a fund-raiser for Clarkston SCAMP, a summer day camp for special needs children.

Saturday's candlelight premier showing will begin at 6 p.m. with registration at Depot Park in downtown Clarkston. A champagne and hors d'oeuvres reception will be held at Thomasville Home Furnishings of Clarkston at 8:30 p.m. following the tour. A live and silent auction is included. A special Orthodontic Full Treatment Package, valued at up to $6,000 and donated by Dr. Charles Munk, will highlight the auction. Advance reservations are requested. Space is limited to 175 guests. Donation is $65 per person.

Sunday's afternoon tour will begin at 11:30 a.m. with registration in Depot Park. The homes will be open between noon and 5 p.m. Shuttle service to all homes will be available. A light lunch at Mesquite Creek is included in the tour price of $25 per person ($22 for ages 62 and up). Advance reservations can be made by sending a check to Clarkston SCAMP, 6590 Middle Lake Rd., Clarkston, MI 48346. Call 620-1882. Walk-in's will be accepted for the Sunday tour, but lunch will only be provided to the first 500 guests.

Following are the homes on the tour.

The Olafsson House on North Main is a Queen Anne-style home built around 1880. Its character lends itself to lots of windows and wide graceful porches. The Olafssons' remodeling has enhanced the three-story home to meet their family's needs, but the original historic quality has been maintained. The turret room is a must-see.

The Eberhardt Home is a Greek Revival-style home on East Washington. This house is full of history as well as warmth and color. Built around the turn of the century, this home originally stood on Main Street where Morgan's Auto Service is located. It was moved to Washington Street in 1920 and used as the town telephone office. The Eberhardts purchased the home in 1982. They have not only restored the gem's brilliance but have also added a beautiful upstairs addition.

The Hampton House on Holcomb is one of the original six homes documented to bring about the village's designation as a National Historic Register district. The house was built in 1850 by William Holcomb, after whom Holcomb Street was named. The Hamptons have refinished the original floors and removed five coats of wallpaper to redecorate a bedroom. Their personal antique family furnishings add character.

The Cooper House on West Church is a spacious ranch-style home built on five acres in the 1970s. Charlotte and Darrell Cooper, owners for 26 years, have added warmth and interest to their home with accents of family history and conversation pieces of their travels. The azalea and rhododendron garden is based on the bed at the British Embassy in Washington, D.C., and should be in bloom for the tour.

The Lorimer House, a new home in Bridge Valley subdivision, is one of the first homes built on the ground that belonged to Henry Ford. It overlooks a pond filled with wild life. This 4,000-square-foot house incorporates the romance of England and includes hand-chosen items from across the globe. The 14 white pine trees which had to be removed were used as "bark-cut" siding for this elegant yet very livable home.

Fired OCC employee says he'll fight back

BY MIKE MALOTT
STAFF WRITER
mmalott@oe.homecomm.net

■ 'It is the policy of Oakland Community College to respect the privacy of our employees, including not discussing publicly the reason for termination, however, we can say unequivocally that the college does not retaliate against employees for their union activities or any other reason.'

Dave Adams
executive director of marketing

Patrick Kopytek says he will challenge the Oakland Community College Board of Trustees' decision to dismiss him from his job as director of physical facilities at the college.

He claimed Tuesday that the board's decision the night before to fire him was in retaliation for his union activities and his insistence that "fume hoods" be replaced in science labs at three of OCC's buildings.

"I find it incredible that this comes along in so short a time . . . It is a coincidence I find hard to accept," he said.

He said he plans to file a grievance through the college's administrative procedure as well as file a lawsuit.

OCC Chancellor Richard Thompson said the dismissal is not an act of retaliation, and he insists the present fume hoods are safe. In fact, Thompson said Monday the dismissal is unrelated to those two issues.

"I want to make two things quite clear," he said, "the fume hoods in our chemistry labs are safe and they have been certified as safe by accredited agencies. Secondly, this college administration has not ever retaliated against an employee, and I will defend that statement to anyone who cares to disagree."

Administrators would not specify the reasons for Kopytek's dismissal, saying that would violate his privacy. Employment information is confidential, according to Dave Adams, executive director of marketing.

"It is the policy of Oakland Community College to respect the privacy of our employees, including not discussing publicly the reason for termination, however, we can say unequivocally that the college does not retaliate against employees for their union activities or any other reason," Adams said.

Kopytek was dismissed Monday by a board vote of 6-0 before a group of more than a dozen supporters who turned out to protest the action.

During the vote, half a dozen college employees held up signs reading "Don't Fire Patrick."

Rochelle Heyniger, a student who will graduate in two weeks, and Rose Couture, president of AFSCME Local 2042, which represents other college employees, were among those who turned out in support of Kopytek. Both claimed the firing was an act of retaliation.

Kopytek was the OCC employee who went on a hunger strike from July to September last year over the board's rejection of a contract with his union. Along with about 100 other managers inside OCC, Kopytek said he is a member of the Teamsters and his local is attempting to settle its first contract since voting to organize.

At the same time, Kopytek has been urging the replacement of fume hoods in science labs in Levinson Hall on the Highland Lakes campus, in Building C at Auburn Hills, and on the Southfield campus. He says the existing fume hoods are not safe and wants them replaced. The project would carry a cost of $1.75 million.

In March, Kopytek wrote to OCC Vice Chancellor Clarence Brantley stating that he was "of the opinion that . . . fume hoods in Levinson Hall should be red-tagged and locked-out, so that students and staff are not exposed to an unsafe condition."

But the hoods are safe, Adams said. Although they were installed before present codes were adopted, and have not been updated to meet those standards, outside firms have reviewed the hoods to assure they are operating properly, he said.

Instructors who teach classes in those labs were polled, Adams said, to find out if they believed there was a problem or a safety concern with the hoods. Adams said the teachers did not believe they were unsafe.

Kopytek was suspended from his duties last week. Last Friday, Kopytek was found laying on the ground, conscious but incoherent, in front of the college's Bee Administration Building in Auburn Hills. He was taken to St. Joseph Mercy Hospital for treatment and was released Monday.

Kopytek said his condition, which he did not specify, was directly related to the stress of his dismissal.

"Like every organization, we have a procedure and he went through it," Adams said of the college's disciplinary process. "He was given information and had an opportunity to respond . . . At your company, they can't just walk in and tell you you're fired, and we don't do that either. There were several steps and he has been through them all. It has been a while."

MADD donates equipment to police

Mothers Against Drunk Driving Oakland County would like to think it's playing a LEED-ing role in getting drunk drivers off the road.

The local MADD group offers the LEED (Law Enforcement Equipment Donation) Program that assists law enforcement agencies in acquiring preliminary breath test equipment, known as PBTs, used for drunk driving tests.

For the last year one PBT a quarter was awarded, but the chapter has found that to be inadequate. This year, the chapter will be presenting two or more a quarter, based on demand.

"I see PBTs as an immediate tool to remove the drunk driver from Oakland County roads," said Carole Ravicchio, president of the MADD Oakland County Chapter.

A presentation took place at the Ortonville Recreation Area May 18. Park officials stated they are plagued with an increasing amount of underage drinking, especially during warm weather.

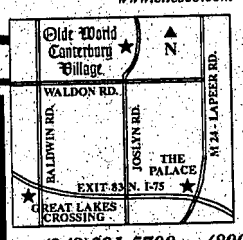

Officer Burr Mitchell accepted the PBT on behalf of the Ortonville Recreation Area.

working at the Clarkston subsidiary of Lighthouse after she retired as a media paraprofessional at Clarkston Elementary School.

"I had seen in the paper that Lighthouse needed volunteers. One of my priorities after I retired was to give back to the community and this place seemed like an ideal place."

So ideal that her husband, Bob, volunteers there also.

She has no plans on leaving this volunteer job, either. "I feel like I'm needed here. There are always so many things happening and so much to be done," she said.

Among her jobs, according to Herr-Krevin's nomination form, are assisting with the Thanksgiving and Christmas food and gift distributions, ordering and packaging fruit and vegetables twice a month for clients from November through April, taking information on new clients and reassessing clients, pairing seniors with partners for the telephone reassurance program and performing other record-keeping tasks. She allocates liquid nutrition to clients and works with the new Focus Hope program and the Emergency Food Assisted Program (TEFAP) at the agency.

Keyser and Herr-Krevin have a good rapport with each other. Herr-Krevin is quick to praise her volunteer, with whom she shares an office. They laugh over stories and are prone to shed tears about clients who died.

"I'm so pleased Audrey won this award," said Herr-Krevin, who lives in Springfield Township. "She never calls attention to herself. She deserves the recognition."

Keyser is the epitome of all of the community award winners honored yesterday at a chamber breakfast at Deer Lake Athletic Club.

"A lot of people are doing things in the community not for recognition but to make it a better place to be," said Wendy Halsey, who served as mistress of ceremonies at the awards breakfast. She's president of the Clarkston Area Chamber of Commerce and chairwoman of its Awards Committee.

"These are the unsung heroes, the ones who don't go around blowing their own horns," added Penny Shanks, chamber administrative assistant.

Other award winners are:

Adult Youth Volunteer — Karen Koval for her work with the Clarkston High School Band Boosters and Odyssey of the Mind.

Young Person of the Year — Jenny Mizusawa for her dedication to others through the Junior Optimist and Octagon clubs and their outreach to helping others.

Community Preservation — Jennifer Radcliff for her dedication to preserving the history of this area since the 1970s, which led to, among other things, the City of the Village of Clarkston being placed on the National Register of Historic Places.

Business Person of the Year — Ed Adler and David Harrison, Clarkston State Bank for their foresight and ability to see the need for a local bank to serve the residents and to bring that need to fruition as the Clarkston State Bank.

These dedicated individuals received plaques from the chamber and a proclamation and a special recognition certificate from Michigan Gov. John Engler, Rep. Ruth Johnson and Sen. Mat Dunaskiss.

The Clarkston Area Chamber of Commerce will nominate these winners for the governor's service awards.

"We were so encouraged this year by the number of nominations we had," Shanks added. "We know there are a lot of people out there doing things that we don't know about. We take so much for granted. We forget there are people behind almost everything that goes on."

Clarkston man offers fire truck for sale

Not often does the opportunity arise to purchase a used fire truck, but Erick Beitler of Clarkston's got one for sale. "The Squirt" was built in 1970. His son, Mark, bought it last year from the Woodhaven Fire Department to use for landscaping and commercial hydroseeding (spraying seeds to grow grass). But according to his dad, Mark could only spray the grass using the truck for a short while before having to refill the tanks. While in good condition, the truck was not efficient for the amount of landscape work being done.

"It shoots like brand-new," said Erick Beitler. The Beitlers did take the truck out for family rides at times. "The grandkids liked it real well," he said.

The truck travels about 15 miles on a gallon of diesel fuel and has an auxiliary generator for electricity. It can spray as far as 300 feet. Beitler hopes to sell the truck for $18,000 and has already spoken to potential buyers. Anyone interested can call (810) 912-9507 for information.

McNally returns to bench following illness

It was back to the bench Monday morning for Judge Gerald E. McNally of 52-2 District Court in Independence Township.

After a leave of absence from the Clarkston area courtroom, McNally couldn't wait to get back to work.

He suffered a mild stroke April 16 and has spent the past month recovering.

"I'm delighted to be back," said McNally. "I came back as soon as I could. It's been less than eight weeks.

"Everyday I feel measurably better. A good living pays off."

McNally spent four days at Royal Oak Beaumont Hospital, where he was treated for the mini-stroke.

A stroke occurs when blood flow to the brain is interrupted by a blocked artery or blood vessel.

Now back where he belongs, McNally spent his first morning back at work reading mail and messages that have piled up in his office. On Tuesday he spoke to classes at Clarkston High School on the topic of law and how it reflects society.

"I wasn't ready to retire, and I don't have to," he said.

In his 30th year as a district court judge, McNally recently began his final term. He was amazed by the public response to news of the incident and his recovery.

He received many letters from those concerned.

"I was really touched," McNally said.

Clarifications

■ Clarkston parent John Koval was incorrectly identified in the Clarkston Eccentric's May 16 edition as "this year's band booster president." Koval, a past president of the Clarkston High School Band Boosters and a five-year volunteer for that group, was not representing that organization in his comments about inequities in extracurricular activities at CHS.

■ Today, May 20, isn't the date for the Capture for Kids fund-raiser for St. Jude Hospital at Saturn North as stated in Sunday's paper. The correct date is Thursday, June 17.

Airborne medical team battles the clock to save lives

BY KIMBERLY A. MORTSON

It's not hard to recognize the St. Joseph Mercy Hospital Midwest MEDFLIGHT crew as they make their way through the hospital in their bright blue jump suits.

The three-person team hurries through the hallway of Urgent Care and splits off at the entrance as Flight Nurse Therese Canning makes her way to the hospital's blood bank for two pints of O-Negative.

Time is of the essence.

On the helo-pad adjacent to the Emergency Room, Lead Pilot John Goold readies the red and white helicopter for lift off. The myriad of buttons, switches, dials and light panels is perplexing to Goold's civilian passenger.

The pilot, whose hair is starting to show streaks of gray, jokes that he recognizes which switches and buttons to work on the instrument panel by their worn appearance and faded labels. It's Goold's experience as a Medevac pilot in Vietnam and the more than 10,000 flight hours he's logged that puts his passenger at ease about flying.

Behind Goold is 28-year-old Dr. Harlan Hodges, a Grace Hospital physician who began flying with the Midwest MEDFLIGHT crew in October 1998. As Flight Nurse Canning boards the aircraft, she and Hodges begin mental check lists of their plan of action once they land at the scene.

As the helicopter blades force conversation to a shout, the crew dons headsets that will allow them to communicate with each other as well as Gill Thom, emergency communications specialist who operates radio transmissions between the MEDFLIGHT crew, the hospital and various fire and safety departments throughout southeast Michigan who request air assistance. Thom plots Goold's flight course by providing him with longitude and latitude information.

"It helps for the pilot to be familiar with local roads because the location of an accident isn't always at the exact location we're dispatched to," said Goold.

The helicopter rises from the concrete pad with an ETA of four minutes. The Van Buren Fire Department placed a call to the Emergency Communications Office early Sunday afternoon that a two-car collision occurred on the service drive of Rawsonville Road — at least two of the victims will require air transportation to St. Joe's and U-M Hospital in Ann Arbor.

Time is of the essence.

What seems like only seconds, the crew circles above the crash to assess the degree of the wreck and Goold observes the landing zone a firefighter has chosen for them to touch down. Power lines, telephone wires, traffic, trees and debris from the collision are all obstacles the pilot has to consider when setting down the helicopter.

Landing on the service ramp about one-half mile east of Rawsonville Road, both Hodges and Canning dart forward from the side of the helicopter toward the scene with their medical gear. The magnitude of damage the two cars suffered is extensive and rescue crews from surrounding townships work diligently to free the victims with the Jaws of Life. Extraction, says Goold, isn't as easy as opening a door and often takes up the most time they spend at the scene.

"You see things at scenes like this that you wish you hadn't," said Goold as he powers down the helicopter.

Flight for life

The female victim Canning and Hodges will attend to is pulled from the car nearly 10 minutes after landing. Her head and neck are braced securely onto a back board and she's lifted upon a stretcher. The doctor and nurse as well as several medical rescue personnel work to assess her injuries, start intravenous fluids and prepare her for the flight to St. Joe's.

The air medical helicopter, a BK117, is considered a strong and versatile aircraft with two-patient transfer capabilities. It is one in a fleet of over 300 that Petroleum Helicopters Inc., the world's largest civilian aviation service company, maintains.

According to Mario Papizzo, one of two mechanics who service the helicopter, the MBB Boehm Kawasaki (BK) 117 is a German aircraft with a Japanese-built transmission and American engines. An inspection is performed every 24-hours and Papizzo and his colleague are on call 24-hours a day, 7 days a week in the event of maintenance problems.

Papizzo will observe his 13th year as a St. Joe's employee this July and gained training and experience in the Navy prior to graduating from the Detroit Institute of Aeronautics (now Michigan Institute of Aeronautics).

Dixie developments clear hurdles

BY CAROLYN WALKER
SPECIAL WRITER

Two developments proposed for Dixie Highway inched closer to reality May 13 following votes of the Springfield Township Board of Trustees.

Kingston Point, a residential plan scheduled to include multiple and single family homes, was granted conceptual approval and a special land use permit by the board after months of negotiations and modifications by the developer, George Mansour.

After downsizing his original proposal from 108 units, Mansour petitioned the board for permission to "cluster" buildings — 57 one-family detached units and 24 one-family attached units — on his 66-acre parcel. His land adjoins the existing Forest Ridge subdivision and is near Old Pond Road.

Cluster housing allows a developer to group his or her buildings in specific areas, while providing for the preservation of open spaces. The property is zoned multiple-family which permits both uses.

"The land has severe topography, severe slopes, wooded areas and he is preserving a significant amount of the property," said Clerk Nancy Strole.

"It's the most significant part of the property," she added, noting that about one-third of the western-most acreage would be preserved.

Strole added that negotiations with Mansour to contribute to the construction of a center turn lane on Dixie Highway are also in the works, though he will not be made solely responsible for those improvements. The township is undertaking a study to consider improvements to Dixie Highway, she added.

"As part of this we are concerned about traffic," she said. "We made clear that we do not expect the developer to bear entire responsibility for installing a center lane. Obviously, we don't expect the developer to bear it all."

In addition to Mansour's project, developer Tim Birtsas was granted a rezoning request for residential property along Dixie Highway, known commonly as the historic Ellis Farm. The farm includes a homestead and a barn, which Birtsas said in the past he would attempt to preserve.

The board agreed to rezone 58 acres at the southern-most portion of the property to an R-2 residential district from an R-1 residential district, Strole said. The zoning classification R-2 permits one home to be built on one acre of land versus the one-home-to-every-one-and-one-half-acre requirements of R-1, thus allowing a slightly higher density.

At a meeting last month, Birtsas said he anticipates building approximately 40 homes and preserving other portions of the property.

At the request of Birtsas and his attorney Neil Wallace, the board agreed to table until June the possible rezoning of an additional 21 acres from R-1 to commercial.

Birtsas has not said yet exactly what types of businesses he might include in the commercial portion.

The board agreed to table the commercial request, said Strole, "To give them an opportunity to give further thought for the variety of concerns that have been previously raised."

Those concerns, gleaned from the public and the planning commission at an earlier meeting, include worries about the intensity of the development and its impact on traffic.

"All that went forward was the residential portion," said Wallace during a telephone interview. "What has happened is we're taking it one step at a time ... to review what the possibilities are."

dent John McCabe, M.D. said the BK 117 helicopter was obtained in November 1998 and enables the hospital to "care for a greater number of patients and provide additional high-tech medical care during transports."

"During our past 13 years of operation, we have assisted approximately 5,000 critical patients, and we are excited that our new vehicle will enable us to expand our services," said McCabe.

In addition to the transportation of trauma victims from emergency scenes the MEDFLIGHT crew carries patients from inter-hospital settings and has done so from as far away as Petoskey. Victims include burn and trauma patients, pediatric, obstetric and medical emergencies.

According to Midwest MEDFLIGHT Program Director Mike Eastley, it is the decision of the rescue crews at the scene as to whether they call on MEDFLIGHT based on the mechanism of injury and a trauma scale.

A typical scenario would call for the police and fire department to arrive at a scene and evaluate the situation, brief medical control in the area and dispatch a call to the Emergency Communication Office if immediate air transport is needed.

"There is a protocol involved at scenes as to when a helicopter is needed," said Eastley who added the national average for a medical air flight is $3,000 and reimbursement varies from between 50 to 70 percent on an overall basis.

"That's for a standard call," said Eastley. "The cost can differ depending on the procedures, equipment and drugs used during the emergency."

Therese Canning, a registered nurse since 1986, said search and rescue missions have also been performed by the crew in an attempt to find missing persons or drowning victims.

"We do everything we can to provide advanced life support at the scene and in the air," said Canning. "We wait and wait for a call then you get to the scene and you have to do everything fast, fast, fast and get out there in an effort to save people who are near death. It's especially nice when people are able to come back and visit us and show how far they've been able to come following a serious injury or accident."

The 35-year-old Pinckney resident started MEDFLIGHT missions 8 years ago and says she can't imagine doing anything else. The opportunity arose as she was working in the Emergency Room of St. Joe's. She said she and her husband weighed the pros and cons of the job including safety risks before accepting the position.

"I had a lot of questions about the program and what was involved," added Canning who says she counts on her husband, a paramedic, to help lessen some of the emotional stress that comes naturally with the job.

She said talking to someone, who can relate to the type of things she sees, helps to keep her sensitive and not unfeeling to the repeated tragedies she witnesses.

"There's also a stress debrief team that we can take advantage of if we've been involved in a critical incident," said Canning. "Even if it's just one of us we'll all get together and talk about the incident."

The flight nurse said she's been involved with stress debriefings in the past.

Emergency services

The air medical program includes four pilots, eight flight nurses and approximately 20 physicians.

"The reward gleaned by the air medical team is their ability to provide advanced life saving treatments supported by rapid transport of the critically injured. Medical professionals are able to provide care equal to that of an emergency room with state-of-the-art equipment such as neonatal isolettes and special cardiac pumps within the confines of the aircraft.

"This is an important service we provide to the community," said Canning. "And it's amazing that this can all be done in a helicopter. We have equipment on board now that wasn't there just a few years ago that has allowed us to dramatically improve the level of care."

In addition to the transportation of trauma victims from emergency scenes the MEDFLIGHT crew carries patients from inter-hospital settings and has done so from as far away as Petoskey. Victims include burn and trauma patients, pediatric, obstetric and medical emergencies.

rear of the helicopter and each member of the MEDFLIGHT crew is intensely focused on the 19-year-old victim's care.

Time is of the essence.

The verbal traffic filling the headset of Goold would present a challenge for anyone not experienced in deciphering simultaneous radio communications. The pilot is talking with Thom in the Emergency Communications Office, the physician and nurse in the aircraft, the air-traffic control tower of Willow Run Airport (who have them on their radar screen) and the rescue crew of the Van Buren Fire Department.

As the high-tech air ambulance gently drops down on the helo-pad at St. Joe's, Canning and Hodges dash through an awaiting door of the Emergency Center and into ER with the critically injured victim.

Called into action

It will be less than 90 minutes before Thom pages the MEDFLIGHT crew to respond to a second two-car collision on Rawsonville Road in Augusta Township.

Landing next to a home in a grassy field surrounded by telephone and power wires, the team treats a 46-year-old male whose passenger was killed instantly in the accident. In the background a blue van, whose roof has been pealed back like a soup can lid, is evidence of the force of the impact.

En route to the hospital and despite the lifesaving efforts made by Canning and Hodges the victim dies as a result of his injuries.

Hodges voice interrupts the silence of the headset and declares the time of death.

Regardless of the more than five decades of total experience shared by the three-person crew, the man's death touches everyone on board including the civilian passenger riding along as an observer. It has been a bad day already and there's four more hours left on their 12-hour shift.

Time is of the essence.

At the end of Canning's shift, she's approached by a member of the patient's family she treated at the first scene of the day. The registered nurse said talking with a victim's relative is always difficult but the comfort gained by both she and the family is immeasurable.

"I try and tell them something that will make them feel better," said Canning, "and that also helps me to deal with the stress associated with what I see and do."

Eccentric reporter Kimberly Mortson was the civilian passenger invited to ride along with the Midwest MEDFLIGHT crew Sunday, May 2.

Don't send us away from news

Please don't send us away, educators, when the news is bad. We need to know what's going on in your schoolhouses — the people's schoolhouses, really — because it's our job to let those people know.

We make this plea following bomb threats received at several Oakland County high and middle schools. Some principals handled it well; some didn't.

At Avondale, police were escorting students in and out of the building after threatening graffiti was discovered at the school. At Walled Lake Western, a bomb threat forced an evacuation of the school. In both cases, our photographers tried to play by the rules, announcing their presence upon arrival.

We realize that it's not easy being an educator — especially a secondary school principal — in the aftermath of the April 20 killings at Columbine High School in Littleton, Colo. Many educators, we understand, are emotionally exhausted after dealing with rumors and threats in their own schools.

And, in the inevitable finger-pointing that follows a tragedy like Columbine, the media have taken their share of hits.

Press coverage of bomb threats and other untoward happenings in schools can influence so-called "copycat activity," many educators believe.

From the TV talk shows to the local PTA meetings, a debate now rages on just what is a responsible way for the media to cover these events.

Well, we're not here to provide any sort of a blanket defense of the media. In fact, some of the smother coverage, both local and national, of the Columbine tragedy left us ashamed and nauseated.

Still, we have to remind educators that local newspapers cannot ignore news like school bomb threats when they happen in our own backyards. We must fulfill our responsibility by reporting information about threats in a timely and accurate way. Public schools belong to the public, and the public needs to know.

However, we affirm that it is also the media's duty not to blow such events out of proportion or glamorize them. It's important, too, that the consequences for students who make the threats be emphasized in the local papers. Stories about arrests and following legal proceedings are crucial to balanced coverage.

And, above all, we need to be accurate. We need the cooperation of school officials and principals to make sure we get the story right, and that just won't happen if we're sent away in the midst of a crisis.

Hey, school people are happy to have us over when, say, the traveling nature show comes around and there are all sorts of cute photo opportunities of kids petting a python.

That's good news ... the good news of what's happening in the public schools. But, alas, life isn't all good news. Bomb threats are bad news, yes, but at least they're not ... Columbine.

Let us all be thankful for that.

Hooked on bargains

Loved Susan Tauber's April 22 column on garage sales. I could so relate to everything she wrote about except the bargaining. I love to bargain!

Here is a poem I wrote a few years ago about "A Garage Sale Junkie." Hope you enjoy it.

A Garage Sale Junkie

I love to go to garage sales, the junk is priced real low;
and everyone I go to,
I'll spend and spend I know.
I should stay home and cook and clean,
but that's no fun, you see.
So in the car, it's off I go,
a garage sale junkie, that's me!
I'm hooked, it's true, can't help myself,
the writing is on the wall;
I'd rather buy at a garage sale,
than at a great big mall!
I check the papers every week,
and save my pennies too;
then in the car, it's off I go the garage sale junkie, that's me!
And so in closing, just let me say
I'm a garage sale junkie, it's true;
and if you could have that much fun,
you'd want to be one too!

Expand term limits

Using its typical form of political correctness to interpret laws, the U.S. Supreme Court denied the voters of Michigan the right to set term limits for our legislators on the federal level.

Term limits continue to be criticized as not being democratic. I ask then what is the democratic process? Voters are denied participation in democracy because powerful politicians hold control over parties and the eventual outcomes of elections. This is not due to term limits, but rather the following:

- The power of incumbency
- Votes bought through PACs
- Alliances and allegiances between and among politicians and treaties
- Power to control who is nominated
- Name recognition
- Lack of campaign finance reform
- Salary increases in exchange for votes
- Benefits added in exchange for votes
- Lobbyists (often previous politicians)
- Payoffs of any type
- Exchange of favors between and among politicians
- Power of the pulpit
- Less trust in government and politics throughout
- Fewer participants in the voting process, especially the young
- Lack of public policies
- Nepotism, cronyism
- Career politicians
- Unethical and immoral behavior of some politicians and bureaucrats
- Racism and ethnocentrism
- Media discrimination
- Franking

Term limits should be expanded to the federal level so that democracy may be reinstated to all political seats in the country. 1998 displayed the ineptitude and ineffectiveness caused by career politicians who have lost touch with their constituents and real life outside Mount Olympus (called D.C.) And what is unfolding in 1999 related to planless and thoughtless wars and their inevitable body bags demands people who will serve the people instead of self-service.

Prosperity is paper-thin

Worried about World War III? Don't. Americans should be less worried about nuclear bombs and more worried about "nuclear bonds." Here's what I mean:

In all the wars of this century, America has been the world's greatest industrial power and the world's largest creditor nation.

But now we are a nation of consumers and debtors, not producers and lenders, like we were. Today, we depend on the stock and bond markets to keep us wealthy.

In the 1960s, the Vietnam War trashed the U.S. dollar, causing the world to abandon the Bretton Woods currency system and its gold standard that served us well up to 1971. The result was a period of economic unpleasantness, and American de-industrialization that we now call the 1970s.

The war in the Balkans has renewed the weak dollar threat. And it could not have come at a worse time – at the end of a Federal Reserve-sanctioned period of very easy money, high debt, and a jumbo-sized stock market bubble to boot.

With so many fickle foreigners holding our bonds, like Japan, China and others, and with the American savings rate somewhere near zero, we really cannot afford to scare global investors with military adventurism in the Balkans. Because, contrary to popular opinion, the U.S. dollar is just a paper currency. It's not gold. It's not oil. It's just paper.

So, fellow baby boomers, put away those love beads and bellbottoms. And, watch the bond market deliver a summer of peace and love. Nuclear bonds are much stronger than nuclear bombs.

OUR MISSION: *"Because we publish community newspapers, we think about community journalism in a fundamentally different way than our bigger competition. POINTS OF VIEW

Concern for community guides us in decisions about news coverage

PHILIP POWER

The massacre at Columbine High School in Colorado has set off shock waves that are still reverberating through every community in America.

In Michigan, not a day has gone by without news of another threat posted on the Internet, more graffiti talking violence or some troubled students caught/suspected of acting out their anger.

The concern has gone so far that literally all the schools in the Port Huron district were closed last week after a killing plot was discovered and a bomb was found. In community after community, schools that once were regarded as safe and solid have suddenly become places of anxiety and concern.

For hometown newspapers like this one, such events call forth special responses. Part of our company philosophy says this: "Because we publish community newspapers, we think about community journalism in a fundamentally different way than our bigger competitors. They consider themselves to be independent of the stories they cover, swooping in to write the unusual or sensational and then dashing off to cover something else. We regard ourselves as both accurate journalists and as caring citizens of the communities where we live and work."

■ It isn't possible to be a good journalist – in seeking out and telling the truth about school officials, for example – without protecting your sources. But as community journalists, we also have the obligations of citizenship in the communities we serve.

In the context of this policy, I've tried to think through how this hometown newspaper can best respond to the events now unfolding in our schools. I've tried to set out a few general principles that should help provide a standard by which our readers can judge how we carry out our responsibilities as community journalists:

Tell the truth. No obligation for any journalist is greater than this.

This obligation extends to the way we report what officials tell us. Consider two examples.

Students at Walled Lake Central High School were evacuated in response to a bomb threat under the pretense of a fire drill. Officials later explained they wanted to avoid creating a panic, which makes sense. But those same officials, for a time, tried to justify covering up the bomb threat, which does not. Later, however, school officials sent a letter home fully explaining the situation.

As our editorial on the subject said, "It is unconscionable for the administration to assume that it has a right to withhold such critical information about the students from their parents."

At Birmingham's Seaholm High School, principal Terry Piper wrote a letter to parents acknowledging graffiti in a boy's bathroom that said, "Death May 5, Someone will die." Security was heightened, with armed police and unarmed volunteer parents patrolling the school. People knew the facts. Piper neither under-reacted nor over-reacted. He deserves credit for telling the truth in a responsible way.

■ Do not sensationalize. These situations are serious enough in their own right without some TV reporter on the make sticking microphones in front of terrified kids and anxious parents. Because we're not engaged in a battle to puff up our circulation numbers, we have no reason to overplay stories that are serious enough as they are.

■ Protect our sources. Be a responsible citizen.

These two principles are often in conflict. It isn't possible to be a good journalist – in seeking out and telling the truth about school officials, for example – without protecting your sources. But as community journalists, we also have the obligations of citizenship in the communities we serve.

Our newspaper in East Lansing experienced this conflict recently when threatened by the prosecutor with a subpoena demanding we turn over all the unpublished photographs taken of the riot. Our policy is to oppose such subpoenas, not because we condone riots or rioters nor because we are immune to the obligations of citizenship. Rather, our concern is that by setting the precedent of complying with one subpoena, no matter how compelling, we open the door to countless other less justified fishing expeditions by police or prosecutors.

Nevertheless, our policy is that should we get even one morsel of information about an act of terrorism – a plot to bomb a school or stage a riot – we will instantly contact the appropriate authorities.

■ Be respectful and responsible. HomeTown newspapers respect their readers and the institutions (such as schools) that define the community. At the end of the day, it is only by being a responsible institution within the community that we can be respectful to the community itself and its citizens.

Phil Power is chairman of HomeTown Communications Network Inc., the company that owns this newspaper. He welcomes your comments, either by voice mail at (734) 953-2047, ext. 1880, or by e-mail: at ppower@oeonline.com

Community forum to address school safety

AL ROBERTS

It is a sad fact of life that we will never be able to say, "That could never happen here." The ugliness of violence can happen anywhere, no matter how hard we work to stop it. The frenzy created by the national media has only served to further the anxiety of parents and students across the nation as well as in our own hometown.

Oakland County is certainly no exception. A few days ago county superintendents gathered at Oakland Schools for a Safety Summit attended by the Oakland County sheriff, prosecutor, school psychologists, communications staff and news media editors. These people gathered to consider their response to violence and tragedy and to solicit tips and advice from each other on how to prepare for the unthinkable while protecting students and staff from the possibility of violence.

■ We will share — to the extent possible — our security plans for school buildings and our redoubled efforts to identify problem behavior, and we will discuss proactive plans for the new school year. Parents, teachers, students and other citizens will have an opportunity to discuss those issues that impact safety. Rumor control, the need to share information that might stop would-be perpetrators and a variety of other topics will be on the agenda.

It was a strange camaraderie, this group of leaders whose main goal — up until six weeks ago — was to provide the best education possible for the students in their districts. Now we were comparing threats, crisis plans, media coverage and communications, finding a reluctant common ground while discovering that almost every Oakland County district has been affected by "copycat" behavior.

I believe that the violence affecting students in our country — and in our nation — is not just a school problem.

Of course, we want our schools to be as safe as they can possibly be and we are doing everything we can to achieve that.

But I also believe the community must come together to solve this problem since it extends beyond the reach of the classroom. Our school system will take the lead in bringing the public together to discuss the problems, look for ways to address them and prevent similar incidents from happening here.

In a few weeks, we will announce a community forum on school safety and juvenile violence. We will share — to the extent possible — our security plans for school buildings and our redoubled efforts to identify problem behavior, and we will discuss proactive plans for the new school year.

Parents, teachers, students and other citizens will have an opportunity to discuss those issues that impact safety. Rumor control, the need to share information that might stop would-be perpetrators and a variety of other topics will be on the agenda.

Our schools were once considered safe havens, places where children could learn and play and become young adults in a protected environment.

With the combined commitment of our community and its school system, we can make sure that Clarkston Community Schools remain a happy, healthy and safe place for its youngsters.

Al Roberts is superintendent of Clarkston Community Schools. His hotline number is 623-5454.

Terrorists will find no refuge here

PHILIP SHERMAN

Journalists name their stories; such a name is called a "slug." It's routinely a one-word description of the story or column, intended for in-house use and reference. The public usually never sees the slug.

I slugged this particular column "Terrorism."

The topic comes to mind as I look at a letter on my desk from Terry Piper, principal of Birmingham's Seaholm High School. Piper wrote to parents acknowledging graffiti that said "Death May 5, Someone will die," which was found in the east wing boys' restroom.

■ Our newspapers stand for nothing if not balance and fairness. But make no mistake — the students who killed their colleagues and teachers at Columbine engaged in an act of terrorism. We find no balance or fairness in an act of terrorism.

Piper did very well in the letter by noting the school wished to neither over- nor under-react. As a precaution, police searched the school and were in the building all day Wednesday, May 5.

Our newspapers stand for nothing if not balance and fairness. But make no mistake — the students who killed their colleagues and teachers at Columbine engaged in an act of terrorism. We find no balance or fairness in an act of terrorism.

Last month, we had the pleasure of listening to our new state Attorney General Jennifer Granholm at a meeting honoring our journalist of the year. Granholm was our guest speaker at what has become an annual event for us.

After her speech, a colleague asked Granholm how she felt about journalists acting in the role of investigators for the state. My colleague was referring to the MSU riots and the subsequent subpoenas that were issued to Lansing-area newspapers to turn over any and all information they might have.

Granholm's answer: She believes in the sanctity of journalists protecting their sources, period. No qualifiers. Granholm added she would never try to compel a journalist to hand over documents, but would hope that in a criminal matter where lives were at stake, journalists would consider voluntarily giving her information.

It isn't possible to be a good journalist without protecting one's sources. Our staffers, and some community members, know just how vigorously we will defend our right to retain information we received in confidence, and any information we may or may not have garnered in the course of writing a story.

That said, if we get one scrap of information about anyone involved in a terrorist act, we will contact the appropriate authorities instantly.

"It's lucky you weren't talking to Dick Butkus." — The Perfectionist, commenting about how Butkus used to like to egg his opponents on.

It's strikes me as no small irony that on Sunday morning the Clarkston Eccentric's lead story was headlined, "6 new sports OK'd for CHS" with a subhead of: "Lightweight football stalled; band bunch balks at new programs."

Sunday was the very day I chose to tell The Perfectionist about my recent face-off with a professional football player. That face-off, a fanciful and unplanned moment in life that I thoroughly enjoyed, left me exhilarated and pensive at the same time. (It's not everyday that a middle-aged mother gets to go nose-to-nose with a football player. But more on that later.)

As it happened, the football player, who I am not going to identify here other than to say that he is BIG, was fast-walking on a treadmill on the very day I chose to go to the gym to check on the status of my membership.

It had been some two years since I'd last spoken to him and I decided to go over and reintroduce myself. We chatted amicably for a few moments while he walked and I watched — talked about our kids and school — when suddenly the conversation took a competitive turn.

Sports, he told me in so many words without hardly coming up for air, are where children learn the nec-

Volkswagen nostalgia revs up in Clarkston

BY STEPHANIE ANGELYN CASOLA

Laura Kotting calls it her "mood car."

Like a mood ring, it's definitive of an era gone by and seems to change color each time you see it. Her 1999 Volkswagen Beetle looks blue in the shade and psychedelic purple in the sunshine.

"I bought it because I grew up driving one, out of obligation," said the Independence Township resident.

And Kotting has noticed she's not the only one. There's a virtual cult following for the futuristic vehicle people call a "bug." And Clarkston's got quite a few members.

"All the other VW drivers, everyone waves," she said. "We all know each other. It's very fun."

Rhoda Haight became a member of that special group six months ago when she purchased her red Beetle. The Clarkston resident agreed that the cars are fun to drive and "so cute."

She drove a blue one in the 1970s and has now upgraded to the five-speed diesel that's parked in her Main Street driveway.

"It's real sporty and nice," said Haight, whose husband works for Volkswagen.

Nostalgia: Volkswagen's new Beetle has developed a following in Clarkston. Laura Kotting keeps fresh flowers in the vase that comes standard in her little bug.

She said the trend is just starting to blossom in Clarkston. Haight estimated that it takes about six months to get the vehicle after ordering it from the factory. Lately she's seen so many, she's sure Beetles are on the rise in the area.

Neither Kotting nor Haight could be sure why the modern Beetles seem to be so popular around town.

"The only thing I can think is maybe we have a lot of people working for Volkswagen," said Kotting.

For her it's a piece of personal history. Kotting remembered driving her father's Beetle when she was growing up. They owned several Volkswagens. Some things haven't changed — like "slug bug." Kotting still catches passengers in other cars punching other passengers in the shoulder when they see her car on the road.

She bought the vehicle on Dec. 19 and is convinced it's got lots of power, despite it's size.

Third-graders learn inner workings of a city

Third-graders of Marci Mendieta's class at Springfield Plains Elementary School completed their education of the inner workings of a city with a graduation ceremony for Junior Achievement's Program "Our City."

The completion of the course was recently celebrated with refreshments and exchange of gifts with the classroom volunteer consultant Dawn Horner, vice president of operations for Clarkston State Bank.

■ In the "Our City" program, Marci Mendieta's class built a city out of little boxes on a map with zones. The students published a newspaper, started a restaurant and visited Clarkston State Bank.

In the "Our City" program, Mendieta's class built a city out of little boxes on a map with zones. The students published a newspaper, started a restaurant and visited Clarkston State Bank.

"It is really educational and simple to execute," Horner said. "The lesson plans are clear; the materials are lively and fun to work with, and the training is excellent. It is just a matter of donating the time. The kids are great, and they love it."

Founded in 1919 by Horace A. Moses, then president of the Strathmore Paper Co., the original Junior Achievement taught high-school students how to set up and run a small corporation. Today, Junior Achievement addresses business and life-skills with a great deal more sophistication, and serves more than 3 million students, grades K-12, nationwide, plus another million through its international affiliates in 103 nations.

"It is this kind of participation, I believe, instills a sense of belonging, a positive attitude toward community and work," Horner said. "Children see how they fit in."

essary life lessons to compete and persevere in the world. He wasn't talking about sports for fitness sake; he was talking about achieving The Dream.

I knew from previous conversations that this man is a hard-driver who achieved enviable professional success because he is willing to, as they say, push the limits and take no prisoners.

I have tremendous respect for him and his accomplishments, and I agree with much of what he said. Nevertheless, being a recent author with several writing awards to my credit, I decided to put in a few good words for the arts and what they have to offer.

Kids can, I tried to say, learn about competition and perseverance through drawing and . . . .

That's when things got heavy and I got stopped short. (That's when he hunkered down on the treadmill, loomed over me, pushed his face toward mine, sneered, and let me know that very few artists achieve livelihoods with their art — and that the college scholarships are mostly given to athletes. Pencil-pushing art forms, he said, are only good through high school.)

You're a writer. Look at the world, he said.

(Let me tell you about the rush that went up my spine. It was nothing short of thrilling. I got up on my toes, met his gaze and time stood still. For one fleeting moment the gym and treadmill disappeared and I saw him as he must look when professional opponents hurtle themselves his way. Head down. Bullish. De-ter-mined!!)

I knew what he left unspoken, but what he meant: The world is populated with a lot of followers. With quitters. With whiners. With those who would rather manipulate and cajole than get out there and work.

I am willing to give him his point. Determination and drive can work wonders in any kind of endeavor.

Ask Hemingway. Ask Picasso. Ask Walt Disney, for that matter.

Surely there are at least a few of them sitting in classrooms these days, wishing someone would say, You can do it. And it will matter.

Carolyn Walker is a free-lance writer. She lives in the city of the Village of Clarkston.

Beetles

"It goes," said Kotting. "It's a blast. I call it my mid-life crisis car."

As her 40th birthday approached, she decided to buy a new car. There was no question in her mind which one she would choose. She considers the Beetle to be a very safe, solid car.

But it's the sense of nostalgia embodied in the chrome and curves of the vehicle that make it so popular — something Kotting predicted long ago. She told a friend, who works for the German car company, that if they reinvented the Beetle, it would easily be a success.

Her little "weeble car" — nicknamed for the rounded plastic toys that wobble but don't fall down — makes her smile. It's so enjoyable to drive, and Kotting receives so many compliments around town, she said she feels "like it's spreading a community service." Even errands and trips to the grocery store are a treat, she said.

Sherry Blaski, an Independence Township resident and Volkswagen employee, can relate to that sentiment.

"What I have noticed is when people see me they come up and have a big smile on their face," said Blaski. "They say 'I remember' and then they relate to me a story. It doesn't matter what age they are. A 15-year-old will get that dreamy look in their eye."

It's the reaction of strangers she notices most about her car. Blaski said individuals are "tapped into pleasant memories" when they see the Beetle.

However, she admits the car has evolved into something more efficient and user-friendly than the Beetle she drove in 1972.

"Everything is within reach," said Blaski, noting the larger size of the trunk and comfort of carpeting inside the new Beetles.

She said there is no comparison between the older and newer models. Instead of hard seats and an insufficient heater, Blaski enjoys the comforts of a modernized Beetle.

"The passion is the same, but the cars are completely different," she said.

Blaski was able to purchase her red Beetle last August and is awaiting the arrival of a yellow one later this year. She said she enjoys the opportunity to "be bop around" town.

The little bug is deceiving to the outside eye.

"It's huge inside," Kotting said. "It's way roomy."

In comparison to the old Beetle her father owned, Kotting says her updated version is loaded with "things that work" like heat and defrosters.

Like many car-lovers, Kotting said she feels an "obligation to keep it clean."

She's not the only one who feels obligated to take good care of the car. Strangers no longer tailgate behind her when she drives the Beetle, even though she sticks to the speed limit at all times.

How do Kotting's kids feel about the car?

That's simple — they love it, too.

"My daughter loves riding in the back," said Kotting. "She calls it her little cocoon."

Lauren Kotting, 12, said her favorite thing about her mother's car is the color.

"It's the mood car, only when the sun's out," she said.

When her son gets his driver's license in two years, he'll be driving the Beetle. When Kotting was learning to drive, she drove a Volkswagen van.

As for the color, she said she liked blue, and didn't want to purchase a fad color. Little did she know at the time, the car wasn't your average blue. Her son noticed the change and announced it turned purple.

Another detail about the Beetle that Kotting loves is the tiny glass vase she keeps filled with fresh little flowers on the dash. It came as a standard option in the original Beetle and is still available in the new model. It even comes with a standard issue flower. Kotting has replaced it with fresh flowers. And Blaski exchanged it for a red rose.

"It's things like that that put the fun back into driving," said Blaski.

That nostalgic "flower power" mobile opposes the sleeker, futuristic feel of the new car, which — according to Kotting — looks a lot more like an alien space ship.

Haight said the car wins her a lot of attention while driving around town.

"I highly recommend it," she said.

ACADEMIC ACHIEVERS

The United States Achievement Academy announced today that Scott J. Hill, the son of William and Sharyn Hill of Clarkston, has been named an All-American Collegiate scholar.

The USAA has established the All-American Collegiate Award program to offer recognition to superior students. All-American Collegiate scholars must earn a 3.3 grade point average or higher. Only scholars selected by a school official or other qualified sponsor are accepted.

Hill, who attends Alma College, was nominated for the national award by Dean James Kridler. As a result, Hill will appear in the All-American Collegiate Yearbook, which is published nationally.

"Recognizing and supporting our youth is more important than ever before in America's history," said Dr. George Stevens, executive director of the United States Achievement Academy. "Certainly, winners of the All-American Collegiate Awards should be congratulated and appreciated for their dedication to excellence and achievement."

Award-winning film to be shown at OCC-Royal Oak

Local filmmaker Kathryn Vander's award-winning documentary, Walk This Way, will be presented in Oakland Community College's Royal Oak Campus 7 p.m. Thursday, June 10. Admission is free and the public is invited.

The 30-minute film tells the story of Ron Bachman, a Northville resident who lost his legs at age 4 and give up prosthetic legs at 18 to walk on his hands. A former broadcaster, he currently gives motivational talks about overcoming obstacles to young people. His speaking engagements are sponsored by the Southeast Michigan Dodge Dealers' Association.

Kathryn Vander

Vander, a Berkley resident, wrote, produced and directed the film. It won a CINE Golden Eagle Award in 1998, and the National Educational Media Network's highest award, a Gold Apple in 1999.

Another Vander documentary, A Poet's Voice, was recently nominated for an Emmy Award by the Michigan Chapter of the National Academy of Television Arts & Sciences. The film explores the life and art of 75-year-old Detroit poet Naomi Long Madgett.

Madgett, who was also nominated for an Emmy, will read her poetry at the kick-off of the Royal Oak Campus' 1999/2000 Writers Live Series Sept. 21.

A third Vander film, "Threads of Survival," tells the story of a 78-year-old Laotian Hmong master weaver honored by the National Endowment for the Arts. The film brings understanding and appreciation for the cultural traditions that are fading as refugees assimilate into American life.

Vander realized that she wanted to work in film, TV and broadcasting while attending The University of Michigan. After graduating she enrolled in creative writing courses at OCC and went to work for WXYZ-Channel 7, advancing to the position of television producer. She is currently employed as a video producer/writer for AAA Michigan.

Kathryn Vander, Ron Bachman, and cinematographer/co-producer John Prusak will attend the showing on June 10 and mingle with the audience in the theater lobby afterward.

The program is by the Royal Oak Campus' Library and English Departments. For more information call (248) 544-5589.

The Royal Oak Campus is located at 739 S. Washington at the corner of Lincoln in downtown Royal Oak. Free parking is available in nearby campus parking structures.

Better buckle up

House makes seat belt a 'primary' cause

BY MIKE MALOTT
STAFF WRITER
mmalott@oe.homecomm.net

■ Passage of Senate Bill 335 ... means officers will be able to pull drivers over if they see the shoulder harness hanging unused inside the car.

You'll have to buckle up when you drive. Legislation to make enforcement of Michigan's mandatory seatbelt law subject to "primary enforcement" by police was approved last week by the state House of Representatives.

Since seatbelt use was first mandated in the 1980s, violations have been considered a "secondary offense," meaning police could not stop drivers for that reason. Tickets could only be written if police pulled a driver over for another reason.

Passage of Senate Bill 335, sponsored by Sen. Bill Bullard (R-Highland) means officers will be able to pull drivers over if they see the shoulder harness hanging unused inside the car.

The bill was approved by the House May 11 by a 68-42 vote. The Senate concurred later in the week to amendments added on the House floor. The bill is now headed to the governor for signature.

One amendment tacked on to the bill called for passing the cost savings, realized by insurance companies as a result of the legislation, on to the policy holders. According to the estimates offered by Bullard, primary enforcement of the seatbelt law will save a total of $170 million statewide annually, much of it as a result of lowered payouts from insurance companies to injured drivers and passengers.

Rep. Lingg Brewer (D-Holt) wanted the savings given back to policy holders. His amendment was approved in a 100-8 ballot.

Rep. Ruth Johnson (R-Holly) offered an amendment which would have altered the bill significantly, applying primary enforcement only if minors are unbuckled. Unbuckled adults would not have been subject to the primary enforcement.

She explained that for adults, she believed seatbelt use should be a matter of personal choice. Nonetheless, the House rejected her proposal.

According to Bullard, mandatory seatbelt use is the only traffic law considered to be subject to "secondary enforcement." For all other violations, police already use primary enforcement, he said, pulling vehicles over when the violation is spotted.

Bullard estimates the change will save 100 lives per year and eliminate 3,000 injuries received in traffic accidents.

Bullard said he expects the change will raise compliance with Michigan's mandatory seatbelt law by 10 to 15 percent. At present, about 71 percent of Michigan actually wear their belts.

Here's how local representatives voted:

Yes — Andrew Raczkowski (R-Farmington Hills), Mike Bishop (R-Rochester), Patricia Godchaux (R-Birmingham), John Pappageorge (R-Troy), Nancy Quarles (D-Southfield), and Marc Shulman (R-West Bloomfield)

No — Bob Gosselin (R-Troy) and Ruth Johnson (R-Holly).

FBAC: improve first, then expand

When it comes to athletic conferences, bigger is better, at least in the minds of most high school administrators around the state of Michigan.

Over the course of this decade, a large majority of the high schools in this state have joined what are commonly called "Mega Conferences", associations that feature anywhere from 10-50 schools that align differently from sport to sport, by enrollment, or a combination of both.

In the fall season, a school could be in one division for football, another for boys soccer and girls basketball, and yet another for cross-country and boys golf.

Conferences such as the Oakland Activities Association (OAA), Macomb Area Conference (MAC) and the Ottawa-Kent Conference (OKC) have flourished, swallowing up smaller conferences and independents by the dozens over the past 9-10 years.

And it's not always a large group of Class A and Class B schools that have joined together for the betterment of interscholastic activities. Many small schools have followed in the same footsteps.

One of the first small-school mega conferences in the state was the Fundamental Baptist Athletic Conference, which was formed in the summer of 1993 by five small independent Christian schools in the Metro Detroit area. The FBAC quickly swelled to 11 schools and is considering expanding in the near future.

Expansion is always a good idea if it means improving the situation for the members within the organization. On the surface, scheduling headaches among many items are minimized. The student-athletes also reap the benefits by being able to compete for a league title against schools that boast a similar talent level in a certain sport instead of being an independent and playing a larger or smaller school just because its four miles down the road.

But perhaps the FBAC should improve on what it has first before expanding.

The Oakland Activities Association has received great reviews during its first five years of existence. Schools are generally placed in a certain division depending on their talent level for a certain sport. And for the most part, everything within the conference runs smoothly.

Perhaps the FBAC should try to model itself after one of the larger associations in the area. It will help improve what I perceive is a conference that is in desperate need of organization.

Sure, the FBAC may not have many of the luxuries like the OAA or MAC might have. A majority of the athletic directors in the FBAC are also full-time teachers along with their coaching duties, or hold full-time positions at their church affiliations and may be under strict time constraints to help a create fluent organization.

Many can't devote that much time to athletics like most larger schools do, or because these schools have small enrollments, ranging anywhere from 24-107 students in grades 9-12, with limited budgets to operate.

Then try to find some individuals that are willing to spend the extra time.

Compared to the OAA, which encompasses schools that range from 600-2,200 students with most having adequate budgets, the FBAC does have some disadvantages. Therefore, its administrative panel needs to develop a stronger backbone to overcome its obstacles.

And it begins from the top.

The League President and the league council must draw up some strict rules that each member school should support and abide by. Right now, their doesn't seem to be any type of structure or leadership within the 11-member conference.

I have spoken to three athletic directors within the league during the past two months and all have concerns that need to be addressed. All three seem very unhappy with the FBAC's direction — or lack thereof — and one A.D. has even spoken of withdrawing from the league after the Speakers included Maureen Moreland (left), president of the Michigan Association of U.S. Track and Field; Dr. Brian Torok of Beaumont Hospital, who spoke on anorexia and bulimia; Sue Robak, a sports broadcaster from Channel 12 (Flint); and Marcy Weston, the assistant athletic director at Central Michigan University.

Rochester avenges earlier loss to Wolves

BY BRAD KADRICH
SPORTS EDITOR
bkadrich@oe.homecomm.net

When the Rochester Falcons came to Clarkston to play the Wolves on a late-April afternoon, the Wolves beat the Falcons for the first time since the early 1990s.

It was payback time Monday.

The Wolves traveled to Rochester for the rematch, and the Falcons were unkind hosts, pummeling Clarkston in a 6-2 defeat that avenged the April 30 loss.

Rochester's Justin Robinson limited the Wolves to six hits while striking out a dozen, including three straight when Clarkston tried to rally in the sixth.

"We got schooled," Clarkston coach Phil Price said.

Clarkston actually led in the game. Derek Casper and John Drallos ripped back-to-back homers in the second inning to put the Wolves up 2-0. But the Falcons scored twice in the third and twice again in the fifth and never looked back.

The loss wasted a nice effort from senior Eric Jenks, who pitched a solid game for the Wolves. He struck out eight.

"Jenks really pitched pretty well," Price said. "We just made a couple of mistakes behind him."

Clarkston had a chance to get back in the game in the sixth, when Spencer Hynes and Drallos both singled to put runners at first and third with nobody out. But Robinson struck out the next three Wolves and Clarkston never threatened again.

"Rochester is a good ball club," Price said. "They've got great tradition there. We came out a little flat, and you can't do that against a team like that."

■ Saturday — Clarkston 4-9, Farmington Hills Harrison 3-12 (first game 10 innings): Ryan Marino pitched 6-2/3 strong innings, but Spencer Hynes got the win with 3-1/3 innings of relief.

Hynes also drove in the winning run in the 10th inning, ripping a double with a runner on in the 10th.

Renaissance festival

Wolves can't catch Phoenix at own track invite

The Clarkston Wolves got a lot of good performances Saturday, just not enough to catch Detroit Renaissance.

Clarkston's Brittani Brewer and Amanda Chicalas were up to the task, teaming to dominate both hurdles races at the Clarkston Invitational track meet Saturday.

But the one hurdle the Wolves couldn't clear was Detroit Renaissance, which set seven new meet records while squeaking out a 78-77 win over the host team.

The Wolves won four races and captured a dozen top-six finishes, but couldn't quite catch Renaissance on their own track.

Brewer won the 100 hurdles in 16.7, while Chicalas finished third in 17.2. The two traded places in the 300 hurdles, with Chicalas winning the race in 47.3 and Brewer finishing fifth in 50.0.

Clarkston's other wins came in relay events. Jennifer Rooding, Nicole Fisher, Rachel Uchman and Lissa Lukens teamed to win the 3200 relay in 9:45.5, 10 seconds faster than Milford's team. And April Rooding, Lisa Hopcian, Tovah Bazely and Alyssa Bergkoetter combined to take the Novice Relay with a time of 4:46.3, 13 seconds faster than Milford.

Uchman finished second in two events, clearing 15-feet-5 inches to take the silver in the long jump, and running the 400-meter dash in 1:02.1. She finished second to Renaissance runners in both events: Brandis O'Neal in the long jump, Jennifer Lawson in the 400 dash.

Other Clarkston medalists included Jennifer Rooding and Fisher in the 800 run. Rooding ran it in 2:25.1 to finish third by less than a second behind Connie Mallinson and Colleen Johnson of Milford, who crossed the finish line together. Fisher was fourth in 2:26.4.

Clarkston finished second (4:13) in the 1600 relay, about seven seconds behind Renaissance's winning team of Stephanie Douglas, Jennifer Lawson, Erin Anderson and Julia Stevenson.

Carla Delvecchio finished fourth in the 3200 run with a time of 12:48.9. Katie Jerge was sixth in the discus with a toss of 95 feet.

1999-2000 school year. And the FBAC wants to expand.

What's the problem? Athletic directors and coaches cite many, ranging from schools refusing to make up postponed league contests because they feel it may hurt their record, to schools refusing to pay dues and fees. Trying to get hold of league officials has also been a constant problem.

The balance of programs doesn't seem to mix, either.

Some schools offer separate varsity, junior varsity and junior high teams, while others even allow seventh and eighth graders to compete on varsity teams instead of allowing their younger kids to compete on a level playing field. That's fair: a seventh grader matching up against an 18-year-old senior who's twice the physical size.

And for the schools that sponsor different levels, it's hard to fill out schedules for junior varsity and junior high teams if their varsity has a mandatory league game but its opponent doesn't boast a JV or middle school team. Scrambling for independent contests is becoming quite a hassle for a few of the league's members.

Currently, the FBAC has two divisions, the Red Division which boasts the league's six largest schools, including Rochester Hills Christian, Clarkston Springfield Christian, Troy Bethany Christian, Clinton Township Faith Christian, Ypsilanti Calvary Christian and Sterling Heights Christian; and the Blue Division, which includes Warren Antioch Baptist, Oxford Christian, Ypsilanti Faithway Baptist, Wixom Christian and Garden City United Christian, the league's five smallest members.

These divisions are based on enrollment of grades 7-12 only. The number of programs or strength of programs aren't really considered, or at least it doesn't appear so. Perhaps they should be divided up by more reasons than just enrollment.

Another coach discussed better media relations as a way of improvement. While some schools have developed solid relations with a variety of media outlets, others still refuse to phone in scores or send in schedules.

Hey, it's free advertisement.

The kinks within the FBAC are many. Regardless of who you talk to or from what school, the common view is the FBAC is in dire straits, and these kinks need to be ironed out.

At the spring league meeting on June 7, perhaps an entire overhaul of the conference should be considered. Take examples from the OAA and MAC and go from there. Set some rules and standards and make sure everyone understands.

A bigger conference works if everyone pitches in and does their part. After six years, its time some administrators step up to the plate and take charge.

Maybe opposing pitchers should just issue intentional walks to Clarkston's Melanie Arnold. It would save time.

Arnold, the center fielder and consummate lead-off hitter, has been nearly perfect lately, and the Wolves have been the beneficiaries of her performance.

Arnold was at it again Tuesday, reaching base safely in all nine plate appearances in Clarkston's 10-4, 12-0 sweep of Lapeer West in a non-league prep softball doubleheader.

That comes after a perfect performance in the Madonna tournament over the weekend, for which she was named the tournament MVP.

Arnold also reached base seven times in a doubleheader with Royal Oak Kimball Monday.

"She's pretty hot right now," said Al Land, practicing to become the master of understatement. "She's just really going well."

Of course, it helps that the Wolves are also getting the other ingredients for success: good defense and solid pitching.

Lisa Ferguson pitched the first-game win Tuesday, and junior Candace Morgan whitewashed the Panthers in the nightcap.

In addition to Arnold's offensive heroics Tuesday, Mary Warchuck was hot.

She blasted a couple of doubles, and she also drove in four runs in the second-game victory.

Land credited third baseman Lindsay Simko with a solid game at the plate, as well.

■ Monday — Clarkston 7-8, Royal Oak Kimball 5-8: Ferguson was solid again, winning the first game.

The second game was interrupted by lightning in the sixth inning.

It likely won't be replayed because it will have no effect on any league standings.

Morgan was pitching the second game.

Arnold was at it again, reaching base seven times in eight trips to the plate.

Land said as well as his Wolves are hitting, they're playing much better softball for several reasons.

"We're playing pretty steady," he said. "It's not so much that we're beating up on people, we're just playing consistent. We're not making the kinds of mistakes that cost us ball games. We're playing smart, heads-up ball."

The Wolves were at Brandon Wednesday. Results weren't available at press time. They travel to Rochester Adams Friday at 4 p.m.

Records help middle school in track action

The Clarkston Middle School girls track team won eight events and set a school record in the 3200 relay, but it still wasn't enough to pull out a win over Lincoln last week.

The 3200 relay team — Colleen Mead, Jenna Hart, Mo Kuhta and Michelle Elmore — won the race with a school-record time of 12:18.9, more than a minute faster than Lincoln's. It was the second time in 10 days the team had broken the record.

It was one of three relay wins for Clarkston.

The 1600 meter team — Kelly Dougherty, Teresa Kuhta, Christyn Reuter and Katie Stapp — won in 4:57.4, while the 400 relay team — Colleen Mead, Lindsay Hart, Danielle Canterbury and Maria Vermeuler — won in 1:00.06.

Chrisytn Reuler won two individual events, taking the 800 meter run in 2:43 and winning the 400 dash in 1:07.

Other winners for Clarkston were Michelle Elmore, who won the 3200 meter run in 13:05; Kelly Dougherty, who won the 1600 meter run in 5:47; and Jenna Clavette, who won the high jump.

■ Clarkston 107, Scripps 22: Clarkston won all but two events, including three of the four relays.

The 3200 relay team set a new record with a time of 12:36.98, which was, of course, broken a week later.

The 800 relay team of Clavette, Khuta, Sarah Mehaffey and Vermeuler won, as did the 1600 relay team (4:50) of Dougherty, Kuhta, Reuter and Anna Trim.

Other winners for Clarkston included Jenny McLeod (10:15) in the 55 meter hurdles; Reuter in the 800 run (2:47) and the 400 (1:10); Dougherty (6:03) in the 1600; Clavette (14.24) in the 100 dash; Kim Wilson in the 200 hurdles (34.82) and the high jump (4-8); Vermueler (10.17) in the 70 meter dash; Mehaffey (31.2) in the 200 dash; and Casey Bolten (13-3) in the long jump.

■ Clarkston 78-1/2, Brandon 50-1/2: Wilson finished the 200 hurdles in a school-record 31.50 and Clarkston bounced the Blackhawks.

McLeod won the 55 hurdles in 9.84, Mehaffey won the 200 dash in 30.02, Dougherty won the 1600 in 6:05; Reuter won the 400 and the 800 (2:43), Elmore won the 3200 in 13:24; and Wilson cleared 4-6 to win the high jump.

■ CMS TRACK

Clarkston won the 1600 relay (Dougherty, Kuhta, Reuter and Beth Randall) and the 800 relay (Clavette, Kuhta, Mehaffey and Vermuelen).

The Boys

Clarkston's boys team won just four events, two of them relay events, in an 87-41 loss to Lincoln May 12.

Andrew Breen won the 800 meter run in 2:29.32, while Cameron Darrow was Clarkston's only other individual winner, taking the 200 dash in 28.15.

Clarkston also won the 1600 meter relay, with Nick Reigel, Jeremy Zito, Eric Gauthier and Evan Schneider finishing in 4:44.8; and the 3200 relay (11:03) behind the efforts of Jeremy Zito, Andrew Breen, Evan Schneider and Danny Spencer.

■ Clarkston 71, Scripps 57: Dan Howard finished the 200 hurdles in a school-record 27.65 and Clarkston routed Scripps.

Howard also won two other events, taking the 55 hurdles in 8.41 and the shot put with a throw of 38-4.

Clarkston's other winners included Jared Elmore in the 1600 run (5:52) and the 3200 run (11:54); Evan Schneider (2:31) in the 800 run; Paul Mesi in the 400 dash (56.8), the 200 dash (25.78) and the long jump (17-2).

Clarkston also won the 3200 relay behind Baker, Breen, Schneider and Rocky Vanchina.

■ Clarkston 106, Brandon 22: Clarkston won all four relays and got another record from Howard while routing Brandon.

Howard set the record in the 55 hurdles, finishing in 8.16. He also won the 200 hurdles (27.42) and the shot put (36-6-1/2).

Mesi won the 100 (12.07) and the 200 (24.52); Elmore won the 1600 (5:40) and the 3200 (11:47); Riegel won the 400 (1:04); Breen (2:26) won the 800; Czarnecki won the 70 dash in 9.00; and Vanchina won the high jump in 5-4.

Clarkston also won the 3200 relay (Baker, Breen, Schneider and Vanchina); the 1600 relay (Brian Lichte, Riegel, Schneider and Justin Whetstone); the 800 relay (BJ Cooper, Mike Moore, Brendan Czarnecki) and Whetstone); and the 400 relay (Joe Kinsey, Brandon Burton, Ryan Lukovich and Ryan Elliott).

Translating the jargon when buying a home

BY DOUG FUNKE
STAFF WRITER
dfunke@oe.homecomm.net

Knowing the jargon often enhances enjoyment of an activity.

The same with real estate. Understanding the language can demystify the process, reduce stress and bring a property transaction to a smooth, successful conclusion.

Here's a list of some terms and definitions you may encounter when buying or selling a home. Read up before getting down to business.

Agency – Legal representation. An agent can represent a seller, a buyer or both but must always disclose a relationship.

Real estate agents must complete at least 40 hours of classroom instruction and pass a state licensing exam. Six hours of continuing education are required annually.

Broker – The owner or representative who's responsible for all agents affiliated with an office. Licensing requirements include three years of practice, additional classroom training and passing a state exam.

Closing – A meeting filled with paperwork at which a house legally changes ownership.

Closing costs – Cash due at closing to obtain a mortgage. Costs typically include title insurance, appraisal, credit report, survey, document-preparation fees and recording fees.

Commission – A fee usually paid by the seller to an agent for selling a home. The exact fee is negotiable and hovers around 6 percent here. Commissions are split among the various agents involved in the transaction and their brokers.

Down Payment – A lump-sum cash payment, usually 15-20 percent of purchase price, that becomes a buyer's direct equity in the property.

Earnest Money – A cash deposit, usually 3 percent of offering price, included with a purchase agreement from a buyer to show sincerity of purpose. This money is held by the buyer's agent and will be applied to the down payment at closing.

Equity – An owner's stake in a property determined by value minus mortgage owed.

Escrow Account – An fund set up for a buyer by the mortgage lender for property taxes and sometimes homeowner's insurance included with monthly payments. The lender then pays those bills from the account when due.

FSBO – For sale by owner. An owner who markets and sells a home without the services of an agent, usually to avoid paying a sales commission.

Homeowners Insurance – Required by mortgage companies and indispensable in any case, this policy pays to rebuild or repair from fire, natural disasters or crimes. Medical costs for injuries to others on property are also covered.

Premium cost depends on value of property, coverages and deductibles and starts at several hundred dollars per year.

Home Warranty Insurance – A policy usually provided as an inducement to a purchaser by the seller to cover breakage in major mechanical or structural systems in the year after sale. Cost ranges $320-375.

Inspection – A third-party examination of a house, usually at the buyer's request, to determine general condition including major structural deterioration or defects.

An inspection can cost several hundred dollar, and the purchaser should be there when it occurs.

Listing Agent – An individual with whom a seller specifically contracts to market and sell a house. Before you settle on a listing agent, interview several about their specific ideas and plans to sell your property .

Mortgage – A loan to buy a house. You'll need a mortgage unless you're rich. Many different time frames and interest rates are available for repayment. Shop around and do the math to determine what works best for you.

Multi Listing Service (MLS) – A compilation of homes currently available for sale, usually kept up-to-date by computer.

Open House – A set time, usually on Sunday afternoons, in which prospective buyers can walk through houses for sale without an appointment and the sellers usually are off the premises.

This is a great way for first-time buyers to get a feel for the market and for Realtors to meet other potential buyers and sellers.

Points – A fee paid by the buyer, usually 1-2 percent of amount borrowed, to obtain a more favorable mortgage interest rate. Points usually are rolled into the mortgage instead of paid as a lump sum.

Pre-Approval – A commitment from a mortgage lender based on employment verification and credit check on how large a loan will be allowed.

Private Mortgage Insurance – A fee added to the monthly payment to protect the mortgage lender if the property is foreclosed. PMI is generally required of purchasers who make a down payment of less than 20 percent.

Costs can be sizable. For example, PMI can cost $65 per month on a 30-year, $100,000 mortgage with 5 percent down. It would cost $43 with 10 percent down and $27 with 15 percent down.

Purchase Agreement – A legally binding offer from a buyer to a seller proposing terms of sale. If desirable, the buyer's lawyer should review the document before it's submitted to the seller.

Real Estate Sales/Transfer Taxes – Usually paid by the seller, tax is $7.50 per $1,000 of sales price to the state and $1.10 per $1,000 of sales price to the county.

Realtor – A sales person who belongs to a real estate professional association and subscribes to its code of ethics. Every Realtor is an agent, but an agent doesn't have to be a Realtor.

Seller Disclosure Statement – Required by law in Michigan as to the seller's knowledge about the condition of various systems, mechanicals and features of the house.

Title Insurance – Usually required of both buyers and sellers in a transaction to protect financial interests in the event of ownership challenges.

The seller buys a policy for the protection of the buyer, the buyer for the protection of the mortgage company. On a $120,000 sale involving a $100,000 mortgage, the seller's policy would cost upwards of $500, the buyer's $220.

MORTGAGE SEARCH

DAVID C. MULLY

A few weeks ago I asked readers for their experiences with mortgage shopping. Thank you to those who responded. Below is one such response. I thought it would be helpful to pass it along to you. If you would also like to respond, you may fax to 248-305-7997 Attn: David Mully or e-mail me at: dmully@rateupdate.com

"I enjoy your column. In response to your article of May 6, I wish to pass on a good deal I received.

"I closed on the purchase of my house on May 29, 1998, with a 30-year, fixed-rate loan, paying 0.25 percent in points for a 7.375-percent conventional mortgage.

"Then, in September looking through my local newspaper, I found a couple of no-point, 30-year fixed-rate, 6.75-percent conventional refinancings. I even found a few on the Internet.

"But the closing costs covered a wide range. One in California wanted $2,450, this was more than what I paid in closing my original mortgage. Since I was going to save $70 per month on my monthly payments, that was a lot of months before I was going to be even on what this refinance would cost me.

"I finally got in touch with York Financial here in Michigan. Sally LaFave, the loan officer with whom I spoke, gave me a very reasonable closing cost with a no-points 30-years fixed-rate conventional loan at 6.75 percent, even though I have less than one year on my existing loan.

"Also, they guaranteed in writing that should rates drop within 12 months after closing they would refinance the loan at no cost at the lower rate. The only requirement is that I must call them to close on the then-existing rate.

"Still, this helped me so that I did not have to keep waiting for rates to drop. As it turned out I was within 1/8 percent of the lowest no-points 30 -year conventional loan.

"I notice many lenders give great advertised rate, but they also include some points. Granted the money is recaptured, but that is over the life of the loan. So I looked for zero-point loan. I can use that money now. Since closing with York Financial, my loan has been sold twice. When I closed, York promised to honor the 12-month no-cost refinance statement."

If you wish to contact York Financial, they can be reached at 248-865-9100.

Civil rights law applies to all couples

REAL ESTATE QUERIES

ROBERT M. MEISNER

Q: Does the state's civil rights act apply to persons cohabitating as it relates to the rental of property?

A: In a recent Michigan Supreme Court case reversing a Court of Appeals decision, the Supreme Court said that nothing in the legislative history of the civil rights act limits the term "marital status" to protecting married couples only.

In the case at issue, a landlord, because of his religious belief, wasn't willing to rent an apartment to unmarried persons, but that was determined to violate the Civil Rights Act.

In that case, the court indicated that the landlord's freedom to exercise his religion under the Michigan and U.S. constitutions isn't violated by requiring his compliance with the Civil Rights Act.

Q: I have heard the term "frustration of purpose" in order to relieve a tenant from an obligation under a lease. Do you any sense of how a government regulation would apply to this situation?

A: In a recent Iowa Supreme Court decision, the court indicated that when a new government regulation prohibits a tenant from using the premises for its originally intended purpose, the tenant is relieved from any further obligation to pay rent.

However, the court went on to say that frustration of purpose doesn't exist if there is a serviceable use still available consistent with the provision in a lease, even if the use is less valuable or less profitable, or even unprofitable.

Local real estate firms merge

Nanci J. Rands has merged her real estate practice with Snyder, Kinney, Bennett & Keating in Birmingham.

Rands, who operated her own company for 23 years, joins as an associate broker and of counsel. She specializes in distinctive, upper-end, luxury properties. She lives in Bloomfield Hills.

"In order to better serve clients, I came to realize that I was going to have to get considerably more back office help or associate with a bigger company," Rands said.

"Snyder, Kinney, Bennett & Keating has the profile I was really pleased to be associated with and also the market strength to service clients well." "Nanci has always been a luminary in the business," said Michael Cotter, a principal with Snyder, Kinney, Bennett & Keating. "This is a wonderful merging of talents. It's sort of a win-win situation for both of us."

Rands' daughter and former partner, Meredith Rands Colburn, also has affiliated with Snyder, Kinney, Bennett & Keating.

Dip tube story goes international

JOE GAGNON

I wrote my first story about defective dip tubes in hot water tanks on Dec. 24 of last year and as a result millions of consumers are being educated on the subject. I have received more than 3,000 phone calls, which has resulted in my telephone bill being close to $700 for last month alone.

Valorie just about hit the roof when I called it the price of fame. Class action lawsuits have been filed in several other states across the country and NBC television is showing a big story on the subject in Chicago. Our own Attorney General Jennifer Granholm has reached agreement with the hot water tank manufacturers to have repairs done for Michigan consumers at no cost to the homeowners. Things are moving along rather quickly and it won't be long before every large and small city in this country will be aware of the subject.

When I first brought this hot water problem out into the open I knew that some of these products were shipped into Canada and Mexico and I didn't have to think twice about the consumers in other parts of the world who are having the same problem as we are. As many of you know, I came from Canada many years ago and still have relatives across the border in Northern Ontario. I have never been to Mexico and know of no one over there who can get the ball rolling.

Maybe someone reading this column has family in Mexico that is associated with the media and can help their fellow citizens. I will be in Canada doing some fishing during the week that you read this column and a newspaper is sending a reporter to interview me while I'm there. I hope this reporter knows how to sit still in a boat.

Let me give you an example of a Canadian homeowner's e-mail sent to me in just the past few days. How many millions of hot water tanks were sent to Canada from the United States is yet to be discovered.

"Dear Joe, Thought you might like to know that your Canadian cousins are also suffering from the "Dip Tube" problem. I just had the gas company in to check my water heater out and even before the fellow looked at it, he asked if I had white pieces of plastic in my aerators. He knew why he was there before I said anything. The tank is rented from the gas company. That's why I had the fast service call and that's why they are going to replace it early next week. The gas company is also arranging for a plumber to come in and flush out the lines and this cost is being picked up by the manufacturer. Tank owners, on the other hand, are having much more trouble getting satisfaction. According to the gas company serviceman, the manufacturer, GSW water heating company used the same dip tube supplier as the manufacturers in the U.S.A. Please pass on the word to your Canadian listeners. I would assume that any tank manufactured in those years made by any manufacturer is probably suspect. I know Smith and Rheem are sold over here. When I first heard you discussing it on the air, I thought, boy, are we lucky we don't have that problem over here. Little did I know. Thanks for the tip, for without it I wouldn't have known to check my aerators. Hopefully, I don't have any damage to the inlet valves on the washing machine and dishwasher. Again, thanks for the tip. Jeff."

In reference to the above e-mail, let me explain that in Canada you can rent a hot water tank from the utility company and pay so much per month.

It is rumored that the Appliance Doctor will be soon meeting with the Attorney General of Canada and be on CBC Television from Toronto. If someone can arrange a trip to Mexico, tell them I need a fishing spot outside a quiet little village. Stay tuned.

Some plants make good partners

MARTY FIGLEY

Some plants grow especially well together and help give a garden a more "natural" environment while benefiting each other.

For instance, sometimes taller ones shade those of a shorter stature so that they can become better established and/or provide a support. Others, like ground covers, help smother weeds.

Many people grow cover crops such as alfalfa or clover and plants in the legume family to enrich the soil, making it more fertile for another crop. On the other hand, some plants give off toxins that inhibit growth of certain others, i.e. the black walnut tree. Nature just seems to have a way of helping to make things come out right.

In our own gardens we have learned to grow plants with like needs such as soil type, pH, light, shade, those with drought tolerance, moisture loving. Then, too, there are plants that perform better when combined with those that use different nutrients from the soil or that have shallow or deep roots. That old saying, "right plant, right place" certainly holds true.

Then there are flowers with natural barriers to discourage insects such as some azalea blooms that have sticky hairs, which deter ants. Other flowers with sweet nectar, such as peonies, attract them.

It is reported that marigolds control nematodes and that if garlic is planted among roses it helps control mildew and black spot, aphids and Japanese beetles. I haven't consciously tried these companion planting techniques, but it might be fun to try a few and see the results. Here are some suggestions:

Plant parsley and basil with tomatoes, eggplant, peppers; calendulas with asparagus and tomatoes; dill with caraway, anise and coriander. Chives reputedly repel insects; hyssop may be beneficial to grapes; lavender and geraniums are generally bug-free. Planted among squash, nasturtiums control aphids, as does rue in the garden, which also chases flies away.

MARTY FIGLEY

Plant partners: Annual calendulas may like to be planted near asparagus and tomatoes.

Here are a few more: Plant hyssop with grapes, grow petunias with beans and rosemary, sage, cabbage, carrots and peas near one another.

I'm not saying that these things will work, but just reporting what has been alleged to work.

If we try something new each year, whether it is companion planting or growing a vegetable garden rather than flowers, or just trying one new plant, it enables us to learn more about this ever-changing "thing" called gardening.

Carolyn Vosburg Hall of Bloomfield Hills has just published "Sewing For Your Garden" (Krause, $19.95).

May is a good time of year to spruce up outdoor living spaces and Hall has innovative ideas to do just that with 50 projects for many diverse areas.

She will be at the Birmingham Bloomfield Art Center, 1516 S. Cranbrook Road in Birmingham, 6:30-7:30 p.m. today to autograph her books and display actual finished objects featured in it. This is an excellent opportunity for the community to support a local artist. Call (248) 644-0866.

Divide your mums while they are small. Position a fork under the clump and lift it out, then drop it from waist high to break it apart. Separate the new smaller clumps and plant them in other parts of the garden or share them with your friends. Pinch back new growth several times during the growing season to produce more compact, floriferous plants.

You can leave Marty Figley a message by dialing (734) 953-2047 on a touch-tone phone, then her mailbox number, 1859. Her fax number is (248) 644-1314.

Invite friends for light spring salads

RUTH MOSSOK JOHNSTON

With gorgeous weather and blue skies, my brain goes into cool mode – no baked casseroles or oven-roasted meats.

Savvy spring salads with a touch of those early spring herbs fresh from the garden are perfect for entrees or sides (the buds and purple flowers on the chives are so great for color and texture).

GREEN BEAN SALAD WITH SWEET ONIONS, TOMATOES AND CHIVE BUDS

Yield: 6 servings

Dressing ingredients:

18 large garlic cloves, roasted and peeled

1/4 cup plus 2 1/2 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil, divided

1/4 cup balsamic vinegar (use good quality)

2 tablespoons chopped fresh basil

1 tablespoon chopped fresh chives

Salt and freshly ground black pepper (to taste)

Salad ingredients:

1 pound haricots vert or very thin green beans, trimmed

1 1/2 cups thinly sliced sweet onions (Vidalia or any sweet onion, including red)

1 package grape tomatoes (cherry tomatoes, halved if unable to find grape), halved or left whole

Chive buds (the bud before it opens on the chive plant), optional

Dressing directions:

In the bowl of a food processor, fitted with a steel "S" blade, or a blender, process the roasted garlic and 2 1/2 tablespoons oil until a smooth paste forms. Add vinegar; process until well blended. Transfer the mixture to a bowl; gradually add the remaining 1/4 cup oil in a steady stream, whisking until dressing consistency is smooth. Add chopped basil and chives; season dressing to taste with salt and pepper.

Salad directions:

In large pot of boiling salted water, cook green beans al dente (crisp-tender), about 2 minutes (Cooking time will vary depending on thickness of beans. Don't overcook – you want to keep them bright green and crisp!). Remove beans with a large slotted spoon or skimmer, and plunge in a large bowl of ice water to stop the cooking process. Once cool, drain in a colander.

In a large bowl, add the green beans, onions, tomatoes and chive buds. Toss with enough dressing to coat evenly. Serve salad at room temperature.

Cook's Note: To roast garlic, preheat oven to 400° F. Oil the outside skin of the bulb with olive oil. Place whole garlic bulb on an oven-proof plate or container; bake for 20-30 minutes until cloves feel soft and tender to the touch. Once cool enough to handle, squeeze each clove to remove from skin.

RED POTATO AND ASPARAGUS SALAD

Yield: 6 servings

Ingredients:

18 small red new potatoes

3 pounds asparagus, washed well and trimmed

3 tablespoons Dijon mustard

Juice of 2 fresh lemons

1 cup olive oil

5 tablespoons minced fresh chives

Salt and cayenne pepper

Dressing directions:

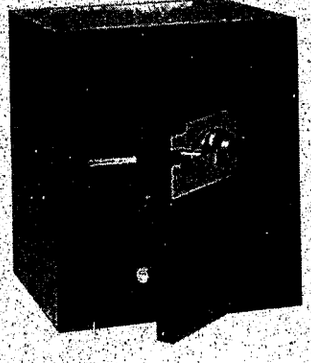

In a small bowl, combine mustard and lemon juice. Gradually whisk in oil (add oil in a steady stream), combine ingredients until smooth. Season with salt and cayenne, to taste.

Salad directions:

In a large pot of boiling salted water, cook red potatoes until just tender, 20-30 minutes (depending on size of potatoes). Drain in a colander and cool.

Cook asparagus in large pot of boiling salted water until just crisp-tender, about 5 minutes. Remove asparagus with tongs, and plunge into a large bowl of ice water to stop the cooking process. Once cool, drain well. Cut potatoes into halves. Cut asparagus into bite-size pieces. Toss vegetables together in large bowl; add chives. Pour salad dressing over vegetables and toss until all vegetables are well coated. Serve at room temperature.

Lorimer home: A touch of European elegance

BY STEPHANIE ANGELYN CASOLA
Staff Writer
scasola@oe.homecomm.net

Bill and Pat Lorimer have successfully proven that English charm can be found within the quaint borders of Clarkston.

After living in Birmingham for 35 years, and residing in 11 different homes, the Lorimers moved to the Clarkston area to build a stately Cotswold-style home on a street bearing that same name.

It may not have a thatched roof, but the likeness of the Lorimer home could easily be replicated in a storybook, painted among emerald hills along the English countryside.

Two aspects of the location particularly drew Pat to the property: the grand Norway spruce that stands tall in their front yard and the crystal clear pond behind their home. She imagined all 12 of their grandchildren would make use of both – one for climbing and the other for fishing.

"We saw the pond and we decided in 10 minutes this was the lot we wanted," Pat said.

Two years later the finishing touches have been completed on a structure that incorporates the romance of England, the purity of its surrounding landscape and the intimacy of hand-chosen antiques from across the globe.

The Independence Township home will be featured during the 1999 SCAMP Home Tour, a fund-raiser for the Clarkston summer day camp

Charming setting: The Lorimer home incorporates the purity of its surrounding landscape, including the pond behind it (above). The dining room and kitchen areas (below, left) are spacious. Pat and Bill Lorimer (below, right) enjoy the two-way fireplace that divides the kitchen and living room. Staff photos by Steve Cantrell.

Lorimer home attended by children with special needs, Saturday-Sunday, June 5-6.

Tour hours are 6-8 p.m. June 5 and noon to 5 p.m. June 6. June 5 is patron night; tickets are $65. Tickets June 6 are $25 per person, $22 for ages 60 and older. Call (248) 620-1882 for information and to register.

Personal connection

The Lorimer home was one of the first built on the grounds that once belonged to Henry Ford.

The Lorimer family has a personal connection to the area. At the age of 19, Pat worked for the tractor division of the Ford Motor Company. She fondly remembers spending time as a hostess for Ford parties held on the same property where her house now stands. Ford employees once tested tractors in the fields, which no longer lie vacant, she recalled.

"She used to give out cocktails," said Bill, smiling at his wife.

"Forty years later, and now we live here," Pat added.

Pat had hoped for a smaller home, but her husband, owner of William Lorimer Building Company, created a structure covering 4,400 square feet. An additional 2,000 square feet is covered by a lower level that holds Bill's office and walkout.

Hugged by that glistening pond and giant climbing tree, the Lorimers' home remains nearly secluded in its natural surroundings. Bill and Pat say that's just the way they like it.

"There's something going on on the pond all day long," Pat said.

Whether it's muskrats scurrying along the ground, ducks floating on the water, or the occasional pesky turtle blocking the front door, a variety of wildlife manages to capture the Lorimers' attention daily.

Preservation

Building the home, Bill Lorimer tried to preserve as much of the surroundings as possible. Though he had to remove 14 white pine trees from the property, he managed to use those trees as slices of "bark-cut" siding for the home.

Blue-gray stonework emphasizes the European elegance even before a visitor walks through the antique front door. Plaster work and copper gutters give the home a distinction from others in the area, and in Michigan.

About 20 different bird houses and a birdbath draw feathered friends from all around. Vibrant daffodils brighten the walk toward the entrance, which is textured with solid cement plaster.

The front door itself, now coated in burgundy and trimmed in gray, is 150 years old. The Lorimers bought it at a retail shop in Cleveland while on vacation. Pat explains "it was just a wreck" when they found it, no thicker than a screen door.

The original antique glass in the center of the door was accidentally broken, but it has since been rebuilt for sturdiness. The door now holds a 1/4-inch thick panel of beveled glass.

Distinction: The back of the house (above) offers a rustic view, while the front (below) has such distinctive features as copper gutters and an antique door. The Clarkston area residence will be on this year's SCAMP Home Tour next month. Staff photos by Steve Cantrell.

Designs

At the Lorimer castle, the den holds a giant stone fireplace and walls made of thick cork pine from northern Michigan. The cork pine was air-dried for about one year before Bill brought it to Clarkston for the interior of their home. Giant knots in the bark give the room its rich, antique look.

Bill Lorimer, of Scottish decent, points out a glass cabinet door bearing a sailboat design. It was imported from Scotland and serves as a lively addition to the rich tones of the den.

A downstairs bathroom is wall papered in white with a green leaf design. To maintain the "vine-like" effect, latticework is placed just below the green ceiling.

In the dining area, walls are faux-painted, a technique in which stucco is painted over with a light color and touched up with a deeper color – in this case a rich caramel brown. It gives the room depth and texture in a way paint or wallpaper might never achieve.

A butler's pantry connects the dining room to the spacious kitchen.

The screened porch, just off the kitchen, connects the home with its surroundings. White wicker furniture fills the porch, providing a quiet space to enjoy the view of the water and the giant pine trees that tower over the home.

"We are very nature-oriented," said Bill Lorimer, who notes visible nests that house his favorite bird, the wood duck.

Inside, a two-way fireplace, made of painted and plastered brick, divides the kitchen and living room areas. Next to it is a matching cove that holds a stack of firewood for easy access. Nine large windows span the living room, bringing the outside indoors.

A bedroom at the far end of the hallway is reserved for the Lorimers' granddaughters. Light and airy, the room overlooks the backyard pond. Two twin beds have been hand-painted with delicate pink flowers, perfect for giggling granddaughters.

Another door leads to a long, narrow bathroom, decorated with blue glass bottles. It connects to another door, which opens into the grandson's room down the hall. Additional scrubbed pine furniture gives the room a sturdy appeal.

Make sad farewell happy departure

LISA LUCKOW-HEALY

From the early years well into adulthood, your children follow your lead in learning about life.

Your job is full of challenges, including those that surface when you or your children have to say good-bye to someone or something.

One of the most daunting experiences for a child of divorced parents is visiting one parent, having a wonderful time, and having to say farewell to return to the other parent.

Understand your child's feelings about the separation and talk about them.

Bring up ideas for how he can feel better. It will help your son take control of his emotions, particularly when he knows the separation only lasts as long as his next visit. Knowing he can pick up the phone and talk to the other parent when he wants to is also reassuring.

Give your child a great deal of attention and positive reinforcement not just during times of separation anxiety and sadness, but every day you spend with him.

Farewells come in many forms. Consider the end of a school year when children have to say good-bye to favorite teachers and close friends.

Perhaps a teacher is retiring or being transferred to another school. How do you explain the positive aspect of someone being replaced when that teacher has had such a positive impact on your child's education?

Your parenting skills may be tested even further when your child's best friend says good-bye at the end of the school year because her family spends the summer break out of town. The converse may be true if your family is the one spending the break away from home.

Introduce your child and her friend to the idea of becoming pen pals for the summer. Explain that by writing to each other on a regular basis, they can keep in touch with what the other is doing and send each other interesting things they wouldn't get from a conversation on the telephone.

Your child can be as creative as she chooses with her pen pal correspondence. Encourage her to design her own stationary or customize envelopes with rubber stamps.

Help your child get over losing a teacher to a transfer or retirement by asking the teacher if he or she is open to visits by former students in the coming fall. Both parties will probably look forward to the idea of catching up in the coming year.

Moving to a new home can be a very traumatic experience for your family. Changing school districts, switching jobs, leaving behind strong friendships and trusting neighbors are difficult enough for you, let alone your children. The anxiety of having to establish new relationships in unfamiliar territory tends to prevail.

To help your children adjust, encourage them to write to their friends through letters or via the Internet to share their experiences.

Young children often like to exchange toys. In doing so, they give each other something of meaning that doesn't make the departure feel so permanent.

Older children often have a more difficult time moving away from long established friendships. To help ease the move, try to make the extra effort to accommodate their feelings.

If you are moving fairly close by, offer to drive them back to visit friends on a regular basis. If your children are of driving age, encourage them to visit old friends and maintain lasting friendships.

When moving a great distance away, plan a "field trip" back to the old town. Schedule a weekend to visit with old friends and neighbors. Take friends up on offers to stay at their home or book a two- to three-night hotel stay.

To make the moving transition more palatable for you and your spouse, compile a mailing list of the names, addresses, telephone numbers and e-mail addresses of good friends and neighbors.

Vow to keep in touch through a phone or e-mail chain to keep up with what's happening in your former hometown and to let friends know what your family is doing in your new location.

Backlighting gives drama

MONTE NAGLER

How many times have you been ready to take a picture only to find yourself inadvertently moving your position to get the sun blasting directly into the subject?

Unfortunately, many photographers are under the false impression that full, frontal lighting is a must and that they need to take advantage of every light ray available.

You've all seen pictures of squinty-eyed people with harsh shadows in their faces. These pictures are unflattering and most likely will end up in the bottom of a forgotten drawer.

Full frontal lighting is, of course, not necessary. On the contrary, doing a reverse – a complete 180-degree reverse – and placing the sun behind the subject can give pleasing and dramatic results.

Backlighting will tend to highlight subjects and will separate them from the background. Backlighting, especially when shining through a soft mist or filtering through trees, will produce sparkling and translucent results.

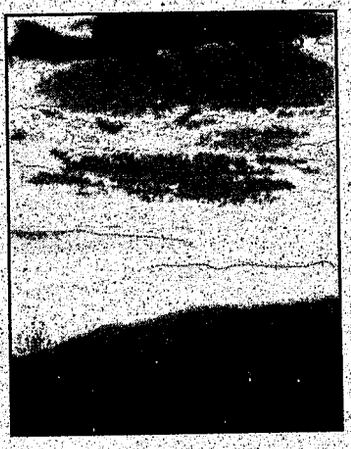

In the photograph shown here, see how the backlighting adds drama and impact to Virginia's Shenandoah Mountains? A picture with frontal lighting just wouldn't have been the same.

Remember to shield the lens from the direct rays of the sun. If you don't, internal reflections and glare may be recorded on the film. Using a lens hood or shading the lens with your hand will solve this potential problem.

When photographing people using backlighting, you must pay special attention to exposure. The bright background will trick the camera's meter and you'll underexpose the picture getting too dark a subject.

To overcome this, move in close to your subject and take a meter reading. Then, move back to your original position and use this reading to expose your shot.

Remember, too, that "fill-in" flash will add sparkle and life to your subject's face while maintaining all of the advantages of backlighting. Fill flash will produce very pleasing results of your backlit subjects.

Oh Shenandoah: Late afternoon backlighting was perfect for Nagler's shot of Virginia's Shenandoah Valley.

Concert venues get facelifts, and there's a slew of festivals

BY CHRISTINA FUOCO
STAFF WRITER

The first day of summer is June 21 but Detroit-area residents know the season officially begins on Friday, May 21, when Pine Knob Music Theatre in Independence Township opens with a concert by Natalie Merchant.

Music fans will see several changes this year to Pine Knob and Meadow Brook Music Festival on the campus of Oakland University. Both venues are run by Palace Sports and Entertainment in Auburn Hills.

Events preceded by an asterisk (*) are on-sale now.

This season, more than $1 million in improvements have been made to Pine Knob including the main and auxiliary parking lots. The acoustics and the lawn's sound system have been enhanced. The number of pay phones at Pine Knob have been doubled, and a new ATM has been added to the East Entrance Plaza.

Meadow Brook also underwent a facelift. Facility improvements include: adding a new concessions stands and a marquee at University Drive/Walton Boulevard and Adams Road; refurbishing the exteriors of all buildings; expanding the pavilion seating capacity and adding a waterfall. PS&E also revamped the pavilion's audio system, including a new lawn speaker system.

Along with Pine Knob and Meadow Brook comes a slew of festivals. Tickets to the last Lilith Fair, Aug. 14-15 at Pine Knob, go on sale this weekend. Lollapalooza is taking yet another year off but will "concentrate on assembling the ultimate line-up for the millennium summer. Organizers decided to postpone the tour until 2000 when they can re-establish Lollapalooza once again as 'The Mightiest of all Summer Extravaganzas,'" according to a press release from The William Morris Agency.

The H.O.R.D.E. Festival and Furthur Festival are expected to announce dates next month. The House of Blues Smokin' Grooves tour may be up in smoke.

But the summer concert season goes beyond Pine Knob and Meadow Brook. Chene Park offers a variety of music ranging from jazz and blues to reggae, while individual communities offer their citizens tons of music.

The Birmingham Jazzfest '99 has secured July 22-24 as its dates with concerts at Shain Park and 12 Birmingham restaurants.

"This year's lineup offers the most exciting and diverse talent ever presented at Birmingham Jazzfest. There's jazz for every taste – straight ahead, traditional, Afro-Cuban, contemporary, and smooth jazz. It will be performed by the best local, regional and national acts," said Alexander Zonjic, artistic director of Jazzfest '99.

This calendar gives detailed information about upcoming concerts, festivals and other major events. Tickets to the events may be purchased at the respective box offices, all Ticketmaster outlets, or by calling (248) 645-6666 to charge by phone.

Director's changes enhance MOT's 'Eugene Onegin'

Michigan Opera Theatre presents Tchaikovsky's "Eugene Onegin," 8 p.m. Friday-Saturday, May 21-22 and 2 p.m. Sunday, May 23 at Detroit Opera House, 1526 Broadway (at the corner of Madison Avenue), Detroit. Tickets $18-$95, call (313) 237-SING or (248) 645-6666.

BY MARY JANE DOERR
SPECIAL WRITER

How daring! Shocking! Roman Terleckyj, stage director for Michigan Opera Theatre's Eugene Onegin, has Lenski commit suicide instead of being killed in a duel, definitely altering the great Russian poet Pushkin's story.

He also has Tatyana faint at the end of the party scene instead of Olga, and Tatyana was costumed black and red instead of in a traditional red gown in the ball scene. This innovative staging was veiled with an oval scrim in front of an absolutely sumptuous set.

Traditions are like habits. They grow tiresome and only change refocuses our attention. Attention getting is what Terleckyj got. The lead character Eugene Onegin (sung by the handsome Russian baritone Evgenij Dmitriev) is supposed to have killed the crazy and "off the deep end" Lenski. Instead, Lenski (sung by tenor David Miller) turns the gun on himself.

This unusual twist of the story gives the cold-hearted Onegin some much needed sympathy by keeping him from becoming a murderer. A blase and rather nasty character, bored with the world, Onegin has managed to illicit the affections of the country girl Tatyana, exquisitely sung and acted by the Bulgarian soprano Zvetelina Vassileva. In a scene which Vassileva turns into a show stopper, the famous Letter Scene, Vassileva pours out her passion in a letter to Onegin. In the following garden scene, he carelessly makes light of her admissions and humiliates this 17-year-old admirer.

Onegin's malice turns meaner in the party scene when he deliberately aggravates his friend Lenski by dancing the cotillion with Lenski's fiancé, Tatyana's sister Olga (sung by a capricious Julie DeVaere). Tenor Miller's big moment then comes when as Lenski he deliberates on his future before the duel in Lenski's Aria, a moment when Miller exudes more Puccini emotionalism than Tchaikovsky lyricism. The audience loves it. Everyone loves the rich romantic Tchaikovsky melodies in this opera – such as the wonderful Waltz – especially in the byronic style Steve Mercurio (who is becoming an MOT regular) conducts the orchestra, with lots of shading (though a little loud in parts).

As so often in the past, MOT features Michigan talent. In this show, the always competent Kathleen Segar is Larina and powerful mezzo-contralto Candace DeLattre is Filipyevna. Not from Michigan, but in particularly fine bass voice is James Patterson as Prince Gremin.

It isn't just the quality of the singing and the lush music that makes this production succeed despite the opera's inherent dramatic sluggishness. It is the exceedingly beautiful sets enclosed by an oval scrim that softens the scenes and highlights the creative lighting effects. The final scene is especially wonderful with Vassileva's sensational emerald green dress featured by the side lighting.

Players' 'Journey' is wondrously fine

Eugene O'Neill's "Long Day's Journey Into Night," 8 p.m. Fridays-Saturdays, May 21-22 and 28-29, and 2 p.m. Sunday, May 23, at the theater, 752 Chestnut, Birmingham. $12. (248) 644-2075.

BY HELEN ZUCKER
SPECIAL WRITER

One of the world's greatest playwrights, Eugene O'Neill is having a revival. "The Iceman Cometh" has been playing to rave reviews in New York. The O'Neill Society and critics are once again arguing over whether O'Neill wrote poetry or bathos. O'Neill, a literary descendent of Henrik Ibsen, the playwright who brought realism into the theater, mingled this heritage with a bit of John Masefield, the poet who wrote sweet blarney about the sea; then mixed Freud into the alchemy that produced his best play, "Long Day's Journey Into Night."

The Village Players production of "Long Day's Journey Into Night," directed by Linda Hammell and Carol Aaron, captures the spirit of "the four haunted Tyrones," the spirit of O'Neill's family. And that's not an easy theatrical feat. Produced by Andrea Kaptur and Vicki Kaptur, with dark technical direction by Mark Hammel, and a brilliant set by Ross Grossman, "Long Day's Journey Into Night" is wondrously fine. The cast captures the texture of O'Neill's lines, as well as the haunting sense that childhood scars last forever.

Ray Gardner is stupendous as 65-year-old James Tyrone, the great Shakespearean actor and skinflint. Tyrone is charming, holds his liquor well, keeps the house dark rather than support the electric company, buys odd land deals, is ambitious for his sons who disappoint him, and has loved his wife faithfully for 35 years. Gardner rises to Dickensian heights when recounting how his mother was left with six children, and he went to work in a warehouse at age 10. He describes his rise to the heights of his profession with relish. We learn why Tyrone sends his consumptive so to the state farm, then tells him he can go anywhere while defending dubious doctors.

Donna J. Kinsey is brilliant as Mary Cavan Tyrone. Mary weaves in and out of her lovely memories of girlhood in the convent, denies her drug addiction and grows mean while she recounts her days. Kinsey gives us the incredible loneliness of Mary's life, the nights in cheap hotels, her inability to make any friends in the theatrical world, her father's death, her self-absorbed, fogbound life.

Michael Voris is fine as James Tyrone Jr., who didn't want to be an actor, so is a drunkard at 34. Tyrone rackets about in his red suspenders calling his mother "the hophead," and playing pal to his younger brother, who wants to believe his mother is fine. Voris is at his best in torn trousers, not too drunk to warn his brother to be on his guard against his jealousy of him.

York R. Griffith, as pale Edmund Tyrone, is marvelous as he describes what it's like to feel at one with the sails, the sea, the sky. Griffith is particularly strong in Act II, when no one seems too concerned that he might die of consumption in six months, and asks his father, "Why the state farm?" though he knows.

Deborah Hills is necessary comic relief as Cathleen Mundy, the cheerful maid. Mundy likes a drink, too, as does the cook, and everyone in the play but mother who has her own "poison," as father calls it.

O'Neill understood his family. And the Village Players give us a production lit with understanding of O'Neill's work.

The perfect site for a summer getaway!

'Phantom Menace' provides entertaining visual feast

KEN HAMSHERE

Encounter: Jedi Master Qui-Gon Jinn (Liam Neeson, left) tells young Anakin Skywalker (Jake Lloyd) and Jedi Apprentice Obi-Wan Kenobi (Ewan McGregor) about a near deadly encounter as droid R2-D2 looks on.

The second coming is at hand.

The long wait is over.

"Star Wars" is back.

George Lucas' epic saga is the most anticipated movie event of the year. Fans have been standing in lines, waiting overnight in parking lots, offering money to others to stand in line so they can be among the first to see "Episode I: The Phantom Menace."

What they'll see is a state-of-the-art visual and aural feast of the mind-boggling possibilities of digital film making.

Those seeking revelations here or rich spiritual insights are best advised to look elsewhere. Lucas makes use of world myths and religious symbols in the way that poets and writers have done for centuries, but he adds little to our understanding of what those myths mean to our spiritual growth.

It's also not great drama, but it is a great time.

From the start Lucas' goal was to recreate the movie serials he enjoyed as a child. He thought, what if the makers of those serials had the money to match their imaginations? Lucas had the money.

The first three films, numbers IV-VI in the serial, were an international sensation. In the 20 years since the last film, generations of children have been introduced to the "Star Wars" phenomenon. It is a part of our identity.

Those movies were rollicking good entertainment full of dazzling special effects, appealing characters, derring-do, silly jokes and, yes, underneath, a mythic story suggesting some biblical importance in Luke Skywalker's growth into manhood and his showdown with Darth Vader, nemesis of the universe and his father.

Now, as Lucas always planned, we go back to discover how Anakin Skywalker, Jedi knight, went over to the "dark side" to become the epitome of evil Darth Vader.

"Phantom Menace" tells a complicated political tale but in a way that would appeal to children, with a bright, adventurous child at the center of the action and a lot of silly, schoolyard humor mixed with the numerous high-tech battle scenes.

The story, for all its complexity, is thin. The humor often falls flat or becomes tiresome. And, most serious of all, there isn't a character to match the reckless Han Solo. It all seems a bit heavy.

But, admit it, you want to see this movie. And you will be grandly entertained.

In a galaxy far, far away, an evil senator in the giant Republic is working with the Trade Federation to threaten his own small planet, Naboo, ruled by young elected Queen Amidala (Natalie Portman). The Federation has set up a blockade and threatens an invasion of its droid warriors if the queen doesn't sign a trade agreement that would ruin her planet.

Two Jedi knights, Qui-Gon Jin (Liam Neeson) and his apprentice, the young Obi-Wan Kenobi (Ewan McGregor), have come to negotiate a peace, as the Jedis are the guardians of peace and justice in the galaxy.

Of course, their efforts fail and they must rush the queen to the Republic's headquarters on the city planet of Coruscant to argue her case. On the way their ship takes fuel on the remote Tatooine. Here on this desert planet they encounter a remarkable and gifted 9-year-old boy slave, Anakin Skywalker (Jake Lloyd), whom Qui-Gon is convinced is the One, the person destined to "balance the Force."

Two familiar friends are introduced, the brave little droid R2-D2 and Anakin's droid in progress, C-3PO, without his golden skin. But comic relief is provided by an odd creature, part rabbit, antelope and lizard, Jar Jar Binks, who speaks in a weird almost Jamaican patois. The computer generated character is given voice and action by Ahmed Best. He's initially funny but then gets to be irritating.

A race scene that sets up Anakin's freedom, several massed battle scenes and the lightsaber duels are all well staged. But even more impressive are the imaginative recreations of several distinct cultures. Each is convincing, from the Mediterranean-like Naboo to the steel and glass Coruscant to the Saharan Tatooine. And the many bizarre animals and humanoids and space ships are also interesting. Credit Westland, John Glenn graduate Doug Chiang, the film's concept designer, for many of these excellent special effects.

Another friend makes his first appearance, the wise little Jedi Master Yoda (voiced by Frank Oz). It is Yoda who gives first warning that something isn't quite right with the amiable, energetic young Anakin.

Neeson is impressive and seems to enjoy playing a Jedi. He is strong, soft voiced but determined. But he doesn't have the youth or snarl of Harrison Ford's Han Solo. Ewan McGregor is flat and stiff as Obi-Wan, as if anticipating Alec Guinness' performance too closely without allowing for some youthful energy. As he will be a key figure in the next two episodes, either he or Lucas will have to reconsider how this part is played.

The young leads are especially good. As all "Star Wars" fans know, the young queen and Anakin will become the parents of Luke and Princess Leia. Natalie Portman projects the right amount of forthright courage that her daughter will carry on. Jake Lloyd is not only a cute Anakin but a spirited and intelligent one as well.

"Star Wars" has never been great science fiction. But for popcorn munching, eye-popping, let's-go-to-a-movie entertainment, Lucas delivers again.

Drama: Elsa (Cher, left) and Georgie (Lily Tomlin) join the English ladies known as "Scorpioni" who live in Florence on the eve of Italy's entry into World War II in "Tea With Mussolini."

'Tea With Mussolini' tells heartwarming, well-played tale

"Tea With Mussolini" is a very nice movie and not what you'd expect from the title.

Yes, there is a scene where Lady Hester (Maggie Smith) and her nephew Wilfred (Paul Chequer) really do have tea with Mussolini (Claudio Spadaro), but that's not what this movie is about.

"Tea with Mussolini" is a heartwarming tale of friendship and coming-of-age that takes place in Florence just before and during World War II.

Mussolini is the premier who makes the trains run on time. He hasn't gone to war with England yet, or joined Hitler.

Lady Hester is part of a group of British expatriates, which film director Franco Zeffirelli calls the "Scorpioni." They dress as if they're in England and even have tea at 4 p.m.

The film is based on Zeffirelli's childhood in England. His intent was to tell a story that "would be a mixture of real and imagined events."

English novelist and playwright John Mortimer researched the ladies of Florence, and the "tea" with Mussolini was partly inspired by an event that actually did take place. Violet Trefusis, an English intellectual who lived in villa outside Florence, met Mussolini.

The film revolves around 7-year-old Luca Innocenti, born out of wedlock and orphaned by his mother. Unable to bear the thought of him growing up in an orphanage, Mary Wallace (Joan Plowright) who works for Luca's father, becomes his surrogate mother and tutor.

She introduces Luca to her "family" of friends who share responsibility for helping him become the British gentleman his reluctant father wants him to be.

Arabella (Judi Dench) who has little talent but fashions herself to be an artist, teaches Luca about art. Wallace teaches him about theater.

The group also includes Georgie (Lily Tomlin), an American archeologist who prefers women to men, and Elsa (Cher), a former Ziegfield dancer, an American of Jewish descent who deals in modern art.

Generous to a fault, Elsa adores Lady Hester, who can't stand her, and the other women who become Luca's family.

Eccentric and independent, the women have adopted Florence as their own. They refuse to leave, even as the cloud of war hangs tentatively over Italy.

When tensions begin to heat up in Florence, Lady Hester decides to go to Rome, because "Mussolini has no idea of what's going on. He assures Lady Hester that "you have nothing to fear. Whatever happens you will always be under my protection. You have my word."

Of course it's a lie, and the women are sent to San Gimignano in Tuscany. Luca is sent to Austria by his father to become the perfect German gentleman.

As the war unfolds, the women are held captive but not harmed. Luca, now 17, returns to help them.

There's suspense, romance, and jealously rears its ugly head. Elsa's life is in danger, and Luca's forced to make some very difficult decisions.

"Tea with Mussolini" has its share of war scenes, none of them gory.

They say you never know how strong a woman is until she gets into hot water. The women in this movie — Cher, Dench, Plowright, Smith and Tomlin — certainly prove they're capable of making lemonade when life gives them lemons.

The only disappointment was the ending credits. Underneath each character is a National Lampoonish cartoon of what happened to them. It kind of takes away from the drama and spectacle that is "Tea with Mussolini."

'Cheating at Solitaire' offers Ness a dose of sanity

CHRISTINA FUOCO

Social Distortion fans are kind of like mailmen. Rain, snow, sleet or hail won't keep them away. Take for instance, a show at the Phoenix Plaza Amphitheatre in Pontiac years ago. Through the driving rain, lead singer Mike Ness punched away at his guitar, cranking out the greaser anthems "Let It Be Me," "Story of My Life" and "Ball and Chain." Mohawk-laden teens crowd surfed, while others slam danced, pushing away fans trying to get a glimpse of the seminal Orange County punk band.

Last month, Ness left that raucous environment to release his debut solo album, "Cheating at Solitaire" on Time Bomb Records.

"I don't have to worry about stage diving and shoes flying up or fights or Nazis," he said with a laugh. "Just the true people who are into it for the music are the ones who follow. The sad thing is, with punk shows you get a lot of people there for the wrong reasons. They think that they know what punk is and what it's all about. They have no idea whatsoever. It's a sad thing, but it's true."

"Cheating at Solitaire" is a country-based album that showcases Ness' varied tastes. The album includes a twangy cover of Bob Dylan's "Don't Think Twice" and Hank Williams' "You Win Again." The raw, roots-rocking "Misery Loves Company" is among Ness' favorite songs to play.

"It's always fun to play, just the raw, raw emotion and energy. It's raw and it's really fun. The whole record is fun to play. I'm gonna tell you this whole thing is just very liberating. It was a little scary at first. To have it so well received, it's nice," Ness said adding that there will be another Social D album.

"Cheating at Solitaire" was conceived in five years but was actually recorded in 1998 at Ocean Studios. For the recording process, he brought along a few special guests – namely Brian Setzer, who plays Gretsch Silver Jet on "Dope Fiend Blues," and Bruce Springsteen who offers vocals and guitars on "Misery Loves Company."

"A couple of songs are five years old. But I'd say I started writing about a year ago. I did about a month of pre-production and then two months in the studio," he explained.

"Don't Feel the Blues" and "I'm in Love With My Car" are among the oldest songs on the CD, but he included them on "Cheating on Solitaire" because he said they were still timely.

"The songs are almost more valid. No one was into cars back then. Now there's a bunch of greaser kids are driving old cars now. It's like a greaser anthem."

Cars are Ness' hobby. The low-rider on the back of the CD jewel case belongs to Ness. He also has a 1953 Harley-Davidson in his collection.

"Yeah, that's what I do when I'm not touring. When I was younger, I could never afford it. Just the last 15 years I've really gotten into doing it. My other obsession is I go junking – thrift stores, junk stores, antique stores."

That, he said, along with "Cheating at Solitaire" is offering him a dose of sanity.

"I just think I really just did it for sanity purposes," he said with a laugh. "I needed to do something different. If I didn't, I'd go crazy. After doing something for 20 years, naturally you want a promotion. You want recognition for what you've done. I just feel that it was time to venture off and try other things if I ever want to grow."

Beautiful life

To singer Cree Summer, life is just beautiful.

She's riding around the United States on tour with "the fellas" – her good friend Lenny Kravitz, the Black Crowes and Everlast. (The tour comes to Pine Knob on Saturday.) Her debut CD "Street Faerie" is out on The Work Group.

"I'm ridin' with the fellas. Lenny took me out to open for him in December in Europe. We had an incredible time and he asked me to open for him on this tour. It's just beautiful," Summer said.

Summer is the former star of the television series "A Different World." Although she has acted for most of her life, Summer is now concentrating on music.

"I haven't acted on television in about 3-1/2 years, and I'm not doing it again anytime soon. It's not because I didn't like it, it was because I didn't think I was very good at it. When you go to work every day, you should have a certain amount of confidence and feel at least that you're competent. There so many incredible actors in this world. I don't think I'll be missed really," she said.

Music is her first love, having moved to Los Angeles to pursue singing. Immediately, however, she fell into acting. Summer made one record with her band, Subject to Change, before Capitol Records dropped the act. The album was never released. "Street Faerie" is her debut solo album, and it's safe to say she's excited about it.

"I'm very geeky that way," she said with a slight giggle. "It makes me want to jump up and down."

Summer's bluesy, mainstream pop effort "Street Faerie" was a "completely spontaneous experience." Produced and arranged by Kravitz, "Street Faerie" was recorded at a studio in Nassau.

"We literally picked the songs that we were going to record on the record the same day. The reason 'Soul Sister' got on the record was because I showed up in the studio that morning wearing a soul sister T-shirt. There's no real rhyme or reason to any of it, which is why I think it's so pure," she said.

Kravitz waves flag on 'American Woman'

Rock festival: Lenny Kravitz, along with the Black Crowes, Everlast and Cree Summer, performs Saturday, May 22, at Pine Knob.

■ 'I used to act in theater. I stopped doing it so I could pursue my music. It's not something that I miss. It's another outlet, another medium which takes off the pressure.'

Lenny Kravitz on acting

Lenny Kravitz picks up the phone, and clears his throat with a deep chesty cough. "Hello?" he said sounding groggy at 1:45 p.m.

He explained that he's calling from his bed on the tour bus, having just woken up minutes before. Contrary to his charismatic, commanding stage presence, Kravitz isn't exploding with energy.

Kravitz, the son of the late Roxie Roker of "The Jeffersons," isn't a man of words. This tour is "fine." He recently covered "American Woman" because someone asked him to, and in his free time he likes to read and watch movies.

Chatting about movies and reading seems to be appealing to Kravitz.

"Hey, what did we watch last night?" he said to a woman nearby. "Oh yeah, 'Last Tango in Paris.' That was last night's feature. This morning is Woody Allen and right now we're doing Brazil, I think, or something."

Kravitz has a long-term relationship with acting. He explained that he's been acting since he was a child. This fall, he has the option to film a movie or to make another record. He said he was unable to reveal anything about the movie.

"I used to act when I was younger. My mom was an actress. I used to act in theater. I stopped doing it so I could pursue my music," he said. "It's not something that I miss. It's another outlet, another medium which takes off the pressure."

This summer, Kravitz is bringing one medium to several towns in the United States, thanks to the package tour he created featuring him, the Black Crowes, Everlast and Cree Summer. The show hits Pine Knob on Saturday, May 22.

"The tour's fine. It's going good. I just had a choice of who was available and who I thought would put on a great show. I liked Everlast's record, but I didn't know him before the tour," Kravitz said about forming the tour.

Kravitz's set will include songs from each of his albums and his new song "American Woman," a cover of the 1970 The Guess Who hit. The song will appear on the soundtrack to "Austin Powers: The Spy Who Shagged Me" (Maverick), and beginning June 1, Virgin will make "American Woman" a part of Kravitz's latest album "5."

The concert video for "American Woman" features Kravitz and his band performing in front of a massive, flashing neon American flag. Recently shot in the desert of Southern California, the video features more than 500 extras, a special appearance by Heather Graham, who plays "Felicity Shagwell" in the film, and a grand finale of fireworks illuminating the sky.

"American Woman" is Kravitz's follow-up to his hit "Fly Away." Kravitz, who won the Grammy for Best Rock Performance Male last February, scored a major hit with "Fly Away." It was the first single to hit No. 1 on the Modern, Active and Album Rock Charts in the same week.

The story behind Kravitz's cover of "American Woman" is simple.

"Somebody asked me if I would do it. That was a song they were looking for. I thought it was a song I could do."

Lenny Kravitz and The Black Crowes perform with Everlast and Cree Summer, at 6 p.m. Saturday, May 22, Pine Knob Music Theatre, I-75 and Sashabaw Road, Independence Township. Tickets are $45 pavilion, $20 lawn. Call (248) 377-0100 or visit http://www.palacenet.com for more information.

Artists celebrate life and express outrage

BACKSTAGE PASS

ANN DELISI

After a month of disturbing headlines and images from Littleton, Colo., Kosovo and tornado-torn areas of Oklahoma and Kansas, the hope that many feel with the blossoming of spring may need a bit of nurturing. Fortunately, the arts are in full bloom.

"When it seems that the world has gone horribly awry, nature provides a spiritual experience to all human beings. It is amazing what can be accomplished by simply looking closely at a flower," says Kay Young, an Oakland County-based photographer whose twenty-year career has celebrated her Native American heritage and the natural world. "My work is intended as a celebration of life through the beauty of nature." If you caught her "Wildflower Paintings: A Photographic Exhibition" at the Detroit Institute of Arts or The Somerset Collection, you already know about the sense of peace her photos can provide.

In describing her exhibit "Feed Me" at the American Indian Community House in New York, Young writes, "My family was humble, not poor, and the teachings were to honor the earth, harvest the food, and give thanks for life – all life around us." There's also a powerful message to guide us through the turmoil of a difficult time, as her work challenges us to, in her words, "to have the perseverance and strength to try and understand all, while living in a place out of balance."

On the next edition of Detroit Public Television's "Backstage Pass," the timeless beauty of Young's work is featured, and traditional songs from Native American cultures are performed by the inter-tribal group the Blue Lake Singers.

The horror at Columbine High has us all asking what can be done to protect young people from violence. For Ann Arbor artist-blacksmiths Scott Lankton and Jim Roth, the tragedy was a terrifying example of the nature of gun violence and the reason for a two-year old project to transform powerful weapons into powerful art. Lankton and Roth use their skills as blacksmiths and their creative abilities to melt handguns into anti-violent artistic symbols.

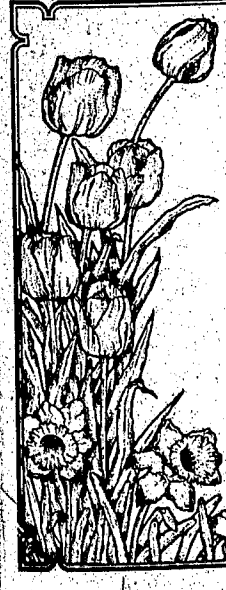

"We've got thirty pieces created so far, and the one that gets the strongest reaction is a gun nestled in a stop sign with photos of gunshot victims," says Jim Roth.

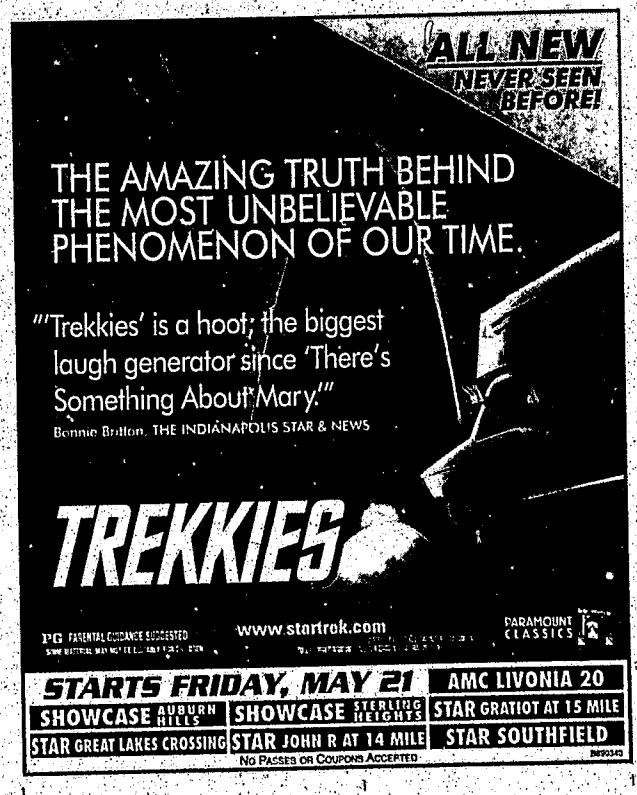

"We're not going to change the world, but we're disgusted that anti-gun groups and members of organizations like the National Rifle Association can't get together to work on the major social problem of gun violence," he adds.

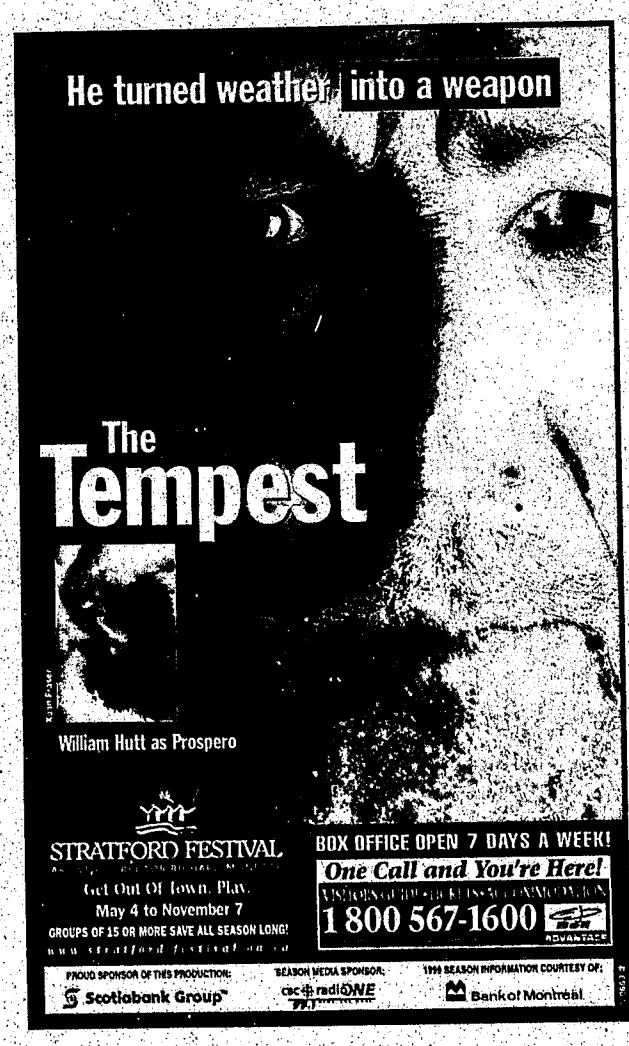

Lankton and Roth have received no backlash from hunting groups concerning the project. "I enjoy hunting and I like guns. The only message we send through our work is our outrage over gun violence," says Toth. Consistent with that theme are creations such as a gun molded into a book, while others are wrapped in chains or locked in a cage.

The two hope to have several public showings later this year and a permanent exhibit later this year. "Backstage Pass" viewers get a look in an edition airing 7:30 p.m. Sunday, May 23, at on Detroit Public TV.

What's my favorite piece of the blacksmith's art? It's a gun with a gold-colored rose coming out of the barrel. Once again, there's peace through flower power.

Among area restaurant trends predicted on this page in January this year, one was that more upscale national chains would open in metro-Detroit. It happened. And came true again on April 26 when Leeann Chin opened its first Michigan location next to the Troy Sports Center.

Yes, Virginia, there is a Leeann Chin, and she was there to greet her first Troy customer, a loyal patron of her Minneapolis, Minnesota-based eateries. What one finds at Leeann Chin is so tied to her personality, that her story begs to be told.

In 1956, she found her way from her native Canton, China, to her current home in Minneapolis via Hong Kong. She spoke no English, but learned quickly from her friendly neighbors who hired her for expert sewing skills.

By 1980, she had also demonstrated her culinary talents, teaching Chinese cooking to some 4,000 students over a 10-year period. She has written cookbooks; most recent is Betty Crocker's New Chinese Cookbook. All this while raising five children!

One of her culinary students was a banker and friend of Sean Connery, her first primary investor. With an SBA loan and Connery's backing, she was able to open the first Leeann Chin's Chinese Cuisine in Minnetonka, Minnesota. She paid off original investors in two years and now, as sole owner, is supported by venture capital investors. Her single restaurant has grown into a network of 38 locations. Her company also encompasses the Asia Grille restaurant concept with Seattle and Twin Cities locations.

Leeann Chin

While Chin said that her "buffet" locations, such as Troy, have similar decor, what the diner finds is East meets West in the new millennium.

The 3,200 square foot layout seats 64 in a colorful, ultra-modern atmosphere done in eggplant, hot pink, orange, yellow and navy. On the walls, Chinese symbols spell out "Chinese Cooking," while the logo character says "Chin."

At a start-up cost of $385,000, the Troy location will need a steady flow of Sichuan and Cantonese food lovers.

And this is what's offered: a well-stylized eat-in or take-out menu with all items under $7. Among appetizers, try either the Oyster Wings (chicken wings in a savory oyster sauce) or if you like lots of flavor, Sichuan Wings, the kicked-up version in a hot and spicy chili sauce.

Chicken, vegetables and just the right touch of fresh ginger fill the potstickers. Order them pan-fried.

The Chinese Chicken Salad with crispy noodles and house sesame dressing is delicious. In addition to two daily entree specials, tied for most popular regular entrees are Peking Chicken and Lemon Chicken. Beef Lo Mein is a close second. Vegetarian Stir Fry will appeal to those preferring meatless. Selection of ingredients varies, so inquire if you have unfavorite veggies.

Not a fan of sweet and sour, I liked the Sesame Chicken with its tangy, balanced sesame sauce. But if you can't decide what to order, consider the Combinations. The half-appetizer and half entree combo at $4.95 is a generous lunch.

At 66 years old, but looking 20 years younger, Leeann Chin is an amazing woman epitomizing the American dream. Her spirit is alive in long-time employees whom she calls "my children." Sue Calton and Jason Erickson combine 27 years with Chin as the driving forces behind the cooking and training of local, young chefs seen preparing food selections in the open kitchen. As training director, David Hill has given all waitstaff their skills.

Getting ready for customers: General manager Jim Burr checks out the buffet at Leeann Chin Chinese Cuisine in Troy.

So enamored with the Leeann Chin concept, former Smitty's Grill (downtown Rochester) general manager Jim Burr has taken his 13 years of restaurant experience with him to carry out general manager duties in Troy. Chin, as inspired founder and corporate chairperson, has also attracted the likes of former Bruger's CEO Steve Finn to carry out CEO responsibilities for her.

Corporations in the heart of Troy take note! There's a delivery menu with recommended 24-hour notice. Orders under $75 need pick-up, but those over $75 can be delivered.

If you like the salad dressing or sauces, you can buy them. The Imperial Sauce is a fast appetizer with bagel chips or the special Leeann Chin chips. Try the Peking sauce with barbecue items, in a quick stir-fry, on hamburgers, as a glaze for pork chops, grilled or pan-fried fish.

Leeann Chin has made her eatery appealing to people on the go who want healthy, flavorful, savory Chinese dishes and who want them fast. She is planning to open more restaurant locations in metro Detroit — including Wayne, Oakland and Macomb Counties — within the next 15 months.
